The Pottsville Journal of Saturday says that about 7000 tons coal have been shipped from that region—1000 of which were destined for the Philadelphia market. The balance, being principally small coal and dirt, was destined for the market along the line of the canal.

Prices we understand are depressed just now and those having the cash would therefore do well to lay in a store for the next winter.

Astonishing Despatch in Travelling.—The arrival of the Neptune from Charleston in 61 hours gives us an idea of the possible and actual rapidity of travelling in this country. She left Charleston after the arrival of the rail road cars from Augusta. Passengers may leave started from Augusta on Saturday morning at 6 o'clock, and coming in the Neptune to this city, could arrive in Boston on Wednesday, having ten hours to spare in New York, making the whole distance from Augusta to Boston. (more than a thousand miles,) in about 90 hours; from Augusta to New York 73 hours.—N. Y. Am.

A Venerable Chair.—Major Lewis of Jeffersonville, Indiana, has the first chair ever made it Kentucky, constructed by that hardy old pioneer Daniel Boon. It is of the old fashioned kind and made of split ash, bearing the marks on each arm made by fixing his gunlock when out of order. It is to be sent to the Nashville Museum.

Somerset Orphans' Court.

Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of James Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be forever barred of his or her action against the said administrators.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the said administrators give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within one year from this time by setting up such notice in five of the most public public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefor against the said administrators.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and such precautions are made, as far as are deemed possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $30 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, by distractions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness. They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any case. Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalize arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at their Office where the Pills are for sale. 3tf

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N.J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction, in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in Maynext, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York.

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and defend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

THADEUS DAVID'S

WRITING FLUID,

A Substitute for Ink, for the Steel or Quill Pen.

THE superiority of this Fluid over common Inks may be summed up under the following heads: The ease with which it flows from and follows the pen, the superior blackness which it acquires, the clearness with which it writes, its bright and distinct color when first written, also its drying so quickly, retaining its fluidity in all weathers, having no tendency to become ropy or muddy, never having any sediment; and lastly, its great durability, and its quality to resist the agents used to obliterate the common inks, renders it particularly valuable for writing Bills of Exchange, Wills, Deeds, and also Log books as it cannot be surpassed by Sea air.

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of Newark, Elizabeth, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For the Plainfield Union.

A Real Occurrence.

In the winter of 1826, I was attending the medical lectures at ——. One pleasant December afternoon, we were all assembled at the usual hour to hear the regular botanical lecture. The Professor had proceeded about a quarter of an hour, when I saw through the window my roommate in company with two other students, hurrying along the street to attend with us. They passed through the yard gate to go to the staircase, that led to the second story, and which was a flight of steps built on the outside of the building in the rear, and tightly enclosed so as to make a very dark passage. I expected every minute to hear their footsteps upon the stairs;—but after waiting some little time, was surprised to see all three making down the street as speedily as possible, and at every few rods looking anxiously behind them. They were soon out of sight, and I could form no reasonable conjecture whatever, as to the cause of their hasty retreat.

The lecturer went on; and we all listened quietly to the formidable array of botanical terms that he showered upon us. But amidst our cogitations about pistils and stamens—leaves lanceolate and stems divaricate—and the professor's repetition of "icosandria, dipentagynia, angiospermia, gymnospermia" and kindred generics and specifics, we were aroused by two or three loud thumps in quick succession, almost as stunning as the above vegetable jaw breakers themselves, and that seemed to come from the staircase that led to the room where we were. All was still again for a while; when knock upon knock was heard as loud as ever. The lecturer now began to look uneasy, but nevertheless went on as usual. Very soon afterwards, however, the noise was repeated, and became louder and longer than ever. The mischief makers among us, and we had our share of them, were now on the lookout for some fun; and the dozing members of the class, laboring under the soothing effects of a comfortable dinner and the warm sun beams that were poured thro' the windows, were wide awake to the racket, if to nothing else. The noise below now became uninterrupted, and very sensibly nearer to us; so much so that we could with difficulty hear the lecturer, although he raised his voice a note or two to compete with the opposition without. The clatter was irregular and rapid, and not altogether unlike Virgil's

We were all on the 'qui vive,' and wished heartily to be let out that we might at once see what was the matter—thinking possibly that the "Devil on two sticks" might be on his way to pay us a visit; though to tell the truth, it sounded much more like a devil upon four sticks. Our professor was a very patient, easy man, and so long as he could be heard at all, seemed inclined to "let well enough alone," rather than run the risk of making greater confusion by meddling prematurely in the matter. He went on discoursing about "leaves cordate, serrate, petioles ciliate, panicles fasciculate," &c. and the noise without went on too, "bang, bang, bang," as regularly as musical notes, but with a good deal less melody. So that between the Professor's skull-cracking technicals, and the din out of doors, our brains were in beautiful confusion.—The cause of the disturbance, whatever it might be, approached nearer and nearer, until it was plain enough we could not hold out much longer. Yet our teacher still proceeded,—"calyx bibracteate, corolla campanulate, and carinately saccate," and then "clatter, clatter, clatter," went the racket again. Thus alternately were our ears saluted with a discharge of knotty scientific terms, and a volley of stunning sounds almost as meaning as any regular-bred jargon itself. The noise had now reached the head of the stair-case, and come with undiminished strength directly behind the lecturer, who sat with his back turned against the door that led from his seat to the passage without. It was too intolerable to be longer endured, and he directed one of the class to open the door and ascertain what was the matter. All eyes were directed towards the spot, when the opening door disclosed to view, neither ghost nor demon, nor yet aught in human shape, —but—a full grown cow! One simultaneous roar of laughter shook the room;—and there stood the poor animal with staring eyes and distended nostrils, panting with fatigue, and as if in surprise to see a room full of giggling bipeds, instead of finding a hay-loft or a granary. As the college did not confer degrees upon quadrupeds, as a certain Scotch school is said once to have done, nor the lecturer admit any one without a ticket, however conversant with the "grasses," a strong committee was appointed to carry the intruder safely down stairs again. This was done forthwith, but with some difficulty; and the poor cow was dismissed from college, with full privilege of being admitted "ad eundum gradum," into any other University, and with feelings no doubt as joyful as many a trembling and successful candidate for a diploma, had, after a rigid examination, an exit from the same place.

On my return home, I found my chum laughing to himself, and anxiously waiting my arrival. I enquired why he had not been at the lecture. He then told me that it was altogether owing to the cow that he had been absent. He and the two in company with him had, in their haste to avoid being late at the college, hurried along and came suddenly against the cow as she was standing just around the rear of the building with her head towards the stair-case. She was startled and ran up a step or two, and the more they tried to get her down, the more obstinately she persisted in going up; until she got so far that they thought the case was hopeless. My room mate who was a Quaker and loved sport mightily, but who was always very wary about getting into a scrape, then advised the rest, as the cow was out of reach, and they might if found there be accused of helping her up, to leave her to her fate, and decamp for their own credit's sake; and to avoid any appearance of a plot, for each to go to his own quarters. They retreated accordingly, while the creature disdaining all their well meant efforts to aid her, was left to the guidance of her own "unerring instinct," and by the light of her nature alone to wend her way up the dark passage. The students were of course highly diverted with the adventure; and however frequently they might expect to see veritable brutes elsewhere, they felt assured that at such a pitch of scientific elevation gained "solitary and alone," they should "Ne'er look upon her like again."

A.

Singular and interesting Occurrence.—A respectable woman having left her child, two years old, to play about the door, till she attended to some household duties, went when she was disengaged to look for her charge. The urchin could barely crawl and she expected to find it at the door. There, however, it was not, and the mother in considerable alarm, called on several of the neighbors, to inquire if they had seen her child. No one had seen it; and as considerable time had elapsed in making fruitless inquiries, the anxiety and fears of the poor woman became proportionably augmented. Parents can only judge of her feelings when no trace of her child could be found. The neighbors kindly assisted in making strict inquisition in every well, pig-stye, hen roost, or out of the way corner, for the wandering waun. He was, however, nowhere to be found, and as a last resource, it was resolved that the bell should be sent through the town. In the mean time the mother in a state bordering on distraction, went into her own house to rummage every hole and corner, bed and cupboard. While she employed, one of her sympathising friends happened to cast her eyes to the gable of a neighboring house, and there with surprise and horror, discovered the lost child perched on a ladder, and within a few steps of its very top, apparently quite delighted with its state of exaltation. A lady endeavored to induce the ambitious mite to come down; but no, it shook his head and sat fast. She then tried to go up the ladder, but half way up her head grew giddy and she was obliged to descend without accomplishing her object.—The mother was informed by this time that the child was found, but her feelings may be more easily guessed than described when she saw its danger. The ladder was long enough to reach the eaves of the three story house, and within four steps of it was her child, holding firmly one of the bars, and looking complacently on the faces below. By its trembling steps the agitated mother cautiously ascended the ladder, but when within arms length of her infant, and on the point of laying hold of him, he as if to mock the agony of his parent, clambered up the remaining steps and straddling across the topmost bar, held out his little hands and smiled, as if proud of his daring feat. The mother at last folded the object of her tears and affections to her fond bosom, and descended with her precious burden in safety, shedding tears of gratitude and breathing a heartfelt prayer to that Providence which had so miraculously preserved her dear little pet.—Worcester Mass. Spy.

A NICE DISTINCTION.—In a cause respecting a will, at the Derby assizes, evidence was given to prove the testatrix, (an apothecary's wife) a lunatic, and among other things, it was deposed that she had swept a quantity of pots, lotions, potions, &c., into the street as rubbish. "I doubt," said the learned Judge, "whether sweeping physic into the street be any proof of insanity." "True my lord," replied the counsel, "but sweeping the pots away certainly was."

Moral and Religious.

TEETOTALISM.—The horrid effects of this mania, should it prevail, are thus amusingly described in an English paper.

Blackwood, in his Magazine, observes—"We wish the teetotallers would make a grand invasion of the distilleries, and after boiling a few of the concoctors of conflagration in their own vats, let in the Thames to liquify the whole plant. With all this we are aware of the respect due to vested interests. The physicians, to whom apoplexies are a rent roll; the surgeon, who lives on the broken bones of humanity; the undertakers who keep themselves in their own houses by removing every one else from theirs; and last, and most grasping of all, the chancellors of exchequers who tax the tombstones, and lay their hand upon every thing above and under ground. The slightest check on the national propensity for gin would be answered by a general wail from the whole multitude who live on the sad varieties of human woe! The workhouses would exhibit the portly matrons and pampered clerks, who preside over the distribution of the six million pounds sterling, which go in potatoes and cheese to the pauperism of Britain, lank as the mice that roamed their empty halls. The turnkeys of the county jails would grow melancholy, and toy with handcuffs no longer. Jack Ketch would pronounce his occupation over, and the drop itself might be sold for old furniture, not required at present by the owner. But the calamity would not end here; Themis herself might give up her last breath in a groan, that would shake to the land from Westminster Hall to the Lizard. The judges would find their circuits reduced to the important duty of marching into the counties with a posse of clowns before them, and the sheriff's carriage to make up the show. The leanness of the courts would soon reduce the corporety of the lawyers, and a speedy mortality or a general recruiting for the East India Company service, would be the only resource against eating each other with the barristers the solicitors must go, that active race, whose smaller dimensions by no means preclude their rivalling activity in extracting their subsistence from what ever they can fix on. The generation of clerks and law subalterns, of all shapes, sizes, and stands must be reduced to the famishing point without delay, all must perish alike."

Temperance—A Short Cut.—In the city of ——, there lives a Methodist man, engaged in the grocery business. He kept for awhile, among his various articles for sale strong beer. On account of continued temperance agitations he became very scrupulous about the correctness of the traffic, and on farther reflection, deeply conscious of the wrong. He was frequently called upon for the article: and, among other persons there were many of his brethren. During the past winter a brother called at his store, and asked for beer, in reply to which he said, "I am ashamed to draw beer." "Well," said the other, I am ashamed to drink it." Said the first, "let us abandon it." This was the winding up of selling and drinking beer in that store. Would to God that the whole concern might be concluded in as short a way!—Adv. and Jour.

CONTROVERSY.—Let no man pusillanimously say, I "cannot contend for eternal principle, because I am so averse to controversy." Can there not be controversy, without angry, malicious vituperation? How is the church ever to be reformed? The purpose of the millenium expects every Christian to do his duty.—N. Y. Evangelist.

"A negro has a soul, 'an please your honor," said the Corporal, (doubtingly.)

"I am not much versed, Corporal," quoth my Uncle Toby, in things of that kind, but I suppose so; or would not leave him without one any more than me or thee."

"It would be putting one sadly over the head of the other," quoth the corporal.

"It would so, said my Uncle Toby.

"Why then, 'and please your honor is a black man to be used worse than a white man?"

"I can give no reason," said my Uncle Toby.

"Only," cried the Corporal, shaking his head, "because he has no one to stand up for him."

"It is that very thing," quoth my Uncle Toby, "which recommends him to protection.—Sterne.

Criminal Imposition Detected.—Mr. Clark, operator at Apothecaries hall, has been engaged by the Admiralty, in analyzing fourteen hundred and sixty seven sacks of flour, which were lying in warehouse at Hull. He took samples from each sack, and it some he found that upwards of a third were plaster of Paris and ground bones, two of the most abominable ingredients, and which the stomach of neither man nor beast is capable of digesting. He sent specimens of this stuff backed, in many of its processes, to the Lords of the Admiralty. The person who owned it, and who was about to send it to Spain or Portugal, was fined in the penalty of ten thousand pounds. Mr. Clark has also analyzed Souchong tea, and found there was twenty five per. cent. of lead ore in it.

Care of an American Mother.—A lady took a child to a physician in Utica, to consult him about its precious health. Among other things she inquired if he did not think the springs would be useful. "Certainly, madam," replied the Doctor, as he looked at the child; "I have not the least hesitation in recommending the springs—and the sooner you apply the remedy the better." You really think it would be good for the dear thing don't you "Upon my word it is the best thing I know of." "What spring would you recommend Doctor ?" "Any old madam where you can get plenty of soap."—Chamber's Journal.

From the Pennsylvania Freeman.

Gov. Everett—Immediate Emancipation.—It is, probably known to most of our readers that Gov. Everett, of Massachusetts, has been one of the most decided opposers of the abolition cause in New England; and that some two or three years since, he suggested to the Legislature of that state the idea of suppressing the action of the abolitionists by force of law. It will be seen however, by the following letter, that the Governor has entirely changed his views on the subject, and that he has become a convert to the doctrine of immediate Emancipation. The character of Governor Everett, not only as a statesman, but as one of the most erudite and eloquent men of the age, renders this an event of no ordinary importance to the great cause of human Emancipation. And the fact that Thome and Kimball's book has been the means, under Providence, of changing the opinions and views of such a man as Edward Everett, is, of itself, a most decisive evidence of the high and authentic and convicting character of the work. It is destined, we doubt not, to accomplish more in the work of emancipation in our country, than any other instrument whatever. Indeed, it is even now working wonders; and we shall not be surprised to learn, very soon, of further conversions among the great men of the nation.

Among the most formidable objections raised against immediate emancipation, and indeed, we may say, the only plausible objection that has the alleged danger which might thereby ensue to life and property. This objection, however, has been entirely nullified by the example of Antigua and Bermuda, where all the slaves were fully and unconditionally emancipated in a single day. Now it must be obvious to every person of common sense, that if slaves may with safety be immediately emancipated in one country, immediate emancipation may be equally safe in another country, where the like relative numbers of whites and blacks exist. And in order to demonstrate in the fullest manner that immediate emancipation is perfectly safe in the United States, we have only to compare the relative numbers in one of the states having the highest proportion of blacks with Antigua. By the census of 1830, it appears that South Carolina had the largest proportion of slaves. The whole population was 581,185, of which 257,863 were whites, 7,920 free colored, and 315,401 slaves. Thus the slaves and free colored persons united, stand in proportion to the whites as less than three to two. By the last census of Antigua, the white population stood 1, 370, free colored 3,020, and slaves 27,537; showing the proportion of blacks and whites to be nearly as 25 to 1!

Now, we petrit to the common sense, and candor, and honesty of every person who possesses a particle of either, to decide, and to express his conviction on the question—If the immediate emancipation of slaves be not only safe, but advantageous and profitable to the masters in Antigua—as is fully demonstrated by actual experiment, where the proportion of blacks to whites is as twenty-five to one—is it not at least fair to presume that immediate emancipation would be equally safe and equally advantageous to the masters in South Carolina, where the proportion is less than three to two?

Here follows a letter from Gov. Everett to Edmund Quincy of Boston, on the subject of the tour of Messrs. Thome and Kimball, in the West Indies. We have room only for the following short extract:

It has given me new views of the practicability of Emancipation. It has been effected in Antigua as appears from unquestionable authorities contained in the work of Messrs. Thome and Kimball, not merely without danger to the master, but without any sacrifice of his interest. I cannot but think that the information collected in the volume will have a powerful effect on public opinion not only in the Northern states but in the slave-holding states.

Bituminous Coal Fields in Indiana.—Almost every day brings to light some hitherto hidden source of wealth and social comfort, in our country. We have before us, this morning a summary statement of the coal beds in the new state of Indiana; by which it would seem that there is bituminous coal enough in that state to supply the wants of the whole country. The writer states after careful examination, that the counties of Vanderburgh, Warrick, Spencer, Perry, Gibson, Pike, Dubois, Martin, Davis, Knox, Green, Owen, Clay, Vigo, Sullivan, Putman, Park, Vermillion and Fountain, contain the richest and most extensive beds of bituminous coal, in the United States. It ignites freely and burns with a brilliant flame. Near the summits of the highest ridges it is found creeping out of the earth, and it is mentioned, as a fact worthy of notice, that in boring for salt water to the depth of 527 feet in Lamasco City, and to the depth of 600 feet on the Big Vermillion, near Danville Illinois, the miners report at both places, a number of Strata of coal, varying from six to eight feet, thick. The Wabash and Erie and Central canal run through those beds of coal, the distance of two hundred miles or more.

This coal must give certainly employment and profit to the canals now in progress, and ultimately enrich the state. In England the stock of their Canal running through coal fields, sells from 500 to 1000 per cent. higher than that of those running through sections of the kingdom solely agricultural.

Encouragement to young farmers.—A law passed at the late session of the Maine Legislature, holds out liberal encouragement to people to settle upon and cultivate the public lands of that State. Any person who will actually settle upon and cultivate public land, may purchase it for 50 cents per acre, and be allowed four years to pay it in; the three first installments to be paid in labor upon the public roads—one quarter of the whole sum each year—and the last in cash at the end of the fourth year. It also provides that if any twenty persons, or a less number, will enter a township where there are no mills, take 160 acres of land each or cause to be erected, within three years, a saw and grist mill for their own benefit, they shall have deeds of their lands for nothing.

There seems to be employment for laborers, at good wages, in the Western states. The Peoria Illinois Register, of the 1st, mentions the arrival in that vicinity of the Rev. Mr. Reid, now in progress there, with a company of men from St. Louis, who are to have $20 a month and no deduction for wet days. Laborers and mechanics are called for in Indiana.

There is ample room and opportunity enough in the broad fields of the West for all who will go. Thousands who now have at best a very scant and precarious living in the Atlantic states, might there enjoy a comfortable independence.

The New York Commercial Advertiser mentions that a committee of the Board of Trade waited upon Mr. Biddle last week to invite the United States Bank to establish a bank in New York, of from 10 to 15 millions capital, under the late general banking law. The proposition was favorably received, and it is believed that the bank will be established as soon as the law goes into operation which will be on the 19th inst

We are stated also that the bank has signified its willingness to afford the United States Treasury the relief for which it has been proposed to sell the Bonds due in October, by anticipating the payment and advancing the six millions. It is said to have in its vaults and in Europe $15,000, 000 in specie—and $10,000,000 in securities available in specie at three days notice. All its responsibilities for circulation and deposites are but $15,000,000—leaving a disposable surplus of $10,000,000.

SCENE IN A SCHOOL ROOM.

Master.—Class in history, step up. Are you ready on the questions ?—Yeth sir !—Billy, who was the first punier ?—Noah !—Why ?—Cause he collected all the beasts of the field and the birds of the air and the fishes of the sea into the ark, and saved 'em from being drowned. Not exactly: but that will do. Dick, I will give you some questions about government. All Americans have should understand it. What do you call that in which one man rules ?—Dome sir !—Next ?—That's an empire !—Not precisely; it is a monarchy. Go up. Tell me, Jake, what's that in which many men rule ?—That's a—a—Next ?—That's loco foco. Come here sir; what do you mean ?—Well sir—I seed it. You saw what ?—Why, at the meeting t'other night, where they was all presidents, and vice presidents, and hardly nobody else, 'cept me and our black Sam. —Sit down sir. Next. What government is that in which the people rule themselves ?—Why that's a federalism !—That's a—a—Congress Next ?—I know it. That's an anarchy ! Go to your places and look over that again. Harvey Diggs !—Yeth'r—Bring up your composition. What subject did I give you ?—Here it 'tis sir. 'Composition on wales and whale Fisheries; wales are a mountainous Country in the Continent of england. Whale fisheries principally goes out from new bedford and nantucket and round the cape, which is very crooked and hard to navigate; the people of whales is called whalemen and toasted Cheese is called welsh Rabbit. Permacity candles is got from whales. There is no more about wales except Whaleboning——" Sir! go to your seat or I'll whale you.—Silence! Begin writing class. May I get a drink sir ?—No sir! Well sir, I can't write 'cause my mouth's so dry. Silence!

Industrious Habits.—Professor Ives, of New Haven makes the following instructive reference to the late President Dwight, in a recent address before a Horticultural Society:

"He had the largest garden, the best culinary plants, and the finest fruits in the city, and all cultivated by his own hands. This fact will excite surprise, when it is recollected that he delivered a lecture to his class six days in a week; performed the duties of Professor of Divinity, and superintended the government of the college. He was the first in the city to cultivate the strawberry extensively and successfully. He demonstrated that an abundance of delicious fruit might be cultivated at a very little expense. He was a minute and accurate observer of the habits and laws of vegetables, and delighted in conversation to give or receive instruction in horticulture. He infused into his conversation music and poetry, and he was listened to with delight, even when his theme was cultivation of Cabbages. He taught that the grape, from which genuine fruit trees was in fact, when the plant was in the most rapid growth and the reason was, that the wound would heal most readily at that season. Dr. Dwight was enabled to perform so much and so various mental labors, by invigorating his constitution by exercise in the open air. No one felt more strongly the sentiment of the poet:

"The idler is a watch that wants both hands,
As useless when it goes as when it stands.
Work of occupation is no rest,
A mind unoccupied is a mind distressed."

DISTRESSING.—A circumstance of a peculiar distressing character occurred last week on the head waters of Wheeling creek, (Va.) which as it was related, is as follows:

A family by name of Burnfield resided near the creek, consisting of the parents and three children. The parents were absent for a few minutes, and during that time the children, through curiosity, it is supposed, placed a coal of fire to the straw lying about and covering a pig pen, near the house, which they had incautiously entered; and did not discover their dangerous situation until too late to extricate themselves, and there being no assistance near at hand, they were left to perish. The attention of the parents and neighbors was attracted to the spot by the light and smoke but too late to save the lives of the children.

Our Country.—One cannot feel the grandeur of our republic, unless he surveys it in detail.—For example, a senator in Congress, from Louisiana, has just arrived in Washington. Twenty days of his journey he passed in a steamboat on inland waters—but constantly moving, at a quick pace too, day and night. I never shall forget the rapture of a traveller, who left the green parks of N. Orleans early in March—that land of the orange and the olive, then teeming with verdure freshness, and life, and as it were, mocking him the midsummer of his northern home. He journied leisurely towards the region of ice and snow, to watch the budding of the young flowers, and to catch the breeze of the spring. He crossed the lakes Ponchartrain and Borgne; He ascended the big Tombeckbee in a commodious steamboat. From Tuscaloosa, he shot athwart the wilds of Alabama over Indian grounds, that bloody battles have rendered ever memorable.—He traversed Georgia, the Carolinas, ranged along the mountains of Virginia—and for 3 months and more, he enjoyed one perpetual, one unvarying ever-coming spring—that most delicious season of the year—till by the middle of June he found himself in the Eden of the Yankee Quoddy, where tardy summer was even then hesitating whether it was the time to come. And yet he had not been off the soil of his own country.—Knickerbocker.

The Belvidere Apollo mentions that much attention is now given in Warren county to the cultivation of silk. The following suggestions concerning the propagation of the Morus Multicaulis or chinese Mulberry, may be of service to cultivators—

The top of the tree may be cut up every spring entirely, and every bud made to produce a tree or it may be laid down in a furrow and covered up root and branch, when very soon young trees will be seen shooting up from many parts of the top, as well as from the roots. Last year a gentleman in this town, had a tree about 4 feet high, worth at that time probably 50 cents, which he treated in this way. A few days after he took it up and obtained from it 32 trees with large good roots, and near four hundred cuttings, which will bring immediately $15, if he would consent to sell it for that price.

Moral Courage.—MATTHEW NEWKIRK, Esq. received and entertained at his mansion in a very handsome manner, on Wednesday evening, a large company of gentlemen invited to meet Mr. Clay. But no member however of the Tennessee society, he had the moral courage to give an entertainment unaccompanied by wine or liquors of any kind. The only beverage used was lemonade and pure water; notwithstanding which, there was at no time of the evening a lack of spirits.—Phil. U. S. Gaz.

The Cincinnati Gazette, speaking of the late melancholy steamboat disaster at that place, makes the following very excellent remarks:

"Too high aim is produced by ambition or interest, unregulated by prudence or knowledge, is the fact against which we have to guard. How can we do it? Only by regulating that ambition and interest, through that prudence and knowledge—qualify the engineer—take away the owner's insurance—put no one the safe boat—and, above all, take away the Grog Shop, which stands in the face upon a wire than nine months of the year in the United States. We hesitate not to say, that it is a deep disgrace to a people calling themselves moral and intelligent, that they cannot make a trip of pleasure or of business, for a day or a week, without aid from the strain of the still. It goes up from land and water in a stench to heaven."

Corporal punishment in Schools.—In a lecture delivered before the institution for school masters in Lausanne, on the principles of punishment, and the nature of those adapted to schools, by the direction of that institution, the lecturer remarked that the education of a child was wholly different from the training of an animal. Obedience which results merely from fear, is of little value—the greater object must be to reach the heart and to excite in the child a true repentance whereas corporal punishment is considered by the child to be in itself an expiation of his fault. On these principles the law on public instruction in the Canton of Vaud, expressly forbids corporal punishment in the public schools.—Boston Medical Journal.

Love Affair.—The New York Whig gives a romantic account of a love affair between a member of the New York Legislature and the chambermaid of the hotel where he boarded.—She is 22 years of age beautiful and amiable.—The Legislator was smitten at first sight, and proposed to accompany her to the theatre. She stated the case to the landlord, who advised her to accept the invitation; which she did. At the Theatre the worthy Legislator proposed matrimony. The maid refused; giving ex cellent reasons. She said his daughters were educated, and she was not, she was poor he was rich,—he would be subjected to the ridicule of his friends, and his wife had not been dead a year. Several days after he again proposed and was again refused. Widow, sirs are persevering fellows, and a third time the member was at her feet. He could not resist her unassuming grace and soft allurements. He now offered to furnish her with every thing she might require, but he was again dismissed, or rather she told to consult his friends. He did so —he consulted many of his brother members—stated his wretched condition and was advised to leave Albany immediately. Notwithstanding all this, he returned to the chambermaid—she refused—he accepted, merely to preserve his senses, and they were to have been married on Thursday night last.

There has been more moving during the past week than we have ever known. Many persons who a year ago, felt themselves not only in comfortable circumstances, but rich, and who occupied stores and dwellings, have been ruined.—They have therefore had to give up both house and store. Hundreds, who enjoyed in comfort the earnings of former years, and who were enabled to live, if not in affluence, yet with every convenience about them, have had to leave their stores for counting rooms, and their neat dwellings for very humble abodes. The sales of furniture of families breaking up house-keeping have far exceeded those of any other period.—N. Y. Express, 9th inst.

VARIETY.

General Scott has made a requisition upon the governor of North Carolina, for one regiment of infantry, to aid him in the removal of the Cherokees. The regiment consists of ten companies, numbering 780 men exclusive of field officers.

The French are blockading Buenos Ayres as well as Mexico.

A worthless fellow named Enoch Dunn, was fined $10 with costs, in Dover, N. H. for great abuse of a Baptist clergyman, while engaged in the administration of baptism, in that place, on the 29th ult.

Six of the most respectable grocers in Boston relinquished all trade in ardent spirits during the last week.

The Louisiana State bank, at New Orleans, resumed specie payments on the 7th inst. The Union bank was about to resume.

It is estimated that the printing business in the United states gives employment to 200,000 operatives, and thirty millions of capital.

Apples.—A farmer residing a few miles from this place, presented us last week with a few apples that were grown in 1836. They were of the russet kind, and were kept in a sound state to the present time in a dry cellar.

The ship Science arrived at Portland, Maine, last week from a whaling voyage of four years. Her appearance created as great a sensation as that of the steam ships at New York. She brought home 2100 barrels of oil. Four of her crew are natives of the Sandwich Islands.

The property of the N. Y. Trinity Church corporation is immense; it is chartered for $4,000,000, and holds more than $12,000,000. It is managed by forty trustees. They have appropriated $100,000 as the bishop's fund, which makes his salary about $6000 per annum, besides perquisites.

Shinplasters.—This portion of the currency is getting into deserved disrepute in our city—neither fish fish nor fowl, can be purchased with them in our markets. On and after the 20th, many of the merchants and traders will cease taking them, having pledged themselves to that effect. They can very well be spared.—N Brunswick Times, 16th inst.

Fair, Fat and Fourteen.—Mr. William Davis of McDonogh county, Georgia, has a daughter only fourteen years of age, who weighs 185 lbs.

A Western paper thus announces the triumph of his candidate for the office of fence-viewer:—"Sound your bugles, haul out your drums, screw your fiddles, and prepare to commemorate an event of awful importance, with one hundred of the very biggest guns."

The New York State loan of half a million of dollars for the enlargement of the Erie canal, was taken lately by Prime, Ward & King, at $100 20 cts. for each $100 of five per cent. stock, redeemable after 1855, having 17 years to run.

The Albinesa.—Among the curiosities at the American Museum, is an Albinesa.—a young lady of nineteen, who recently arrived from England. Her eyes are of a pink hue, and her hair white as snow, falls over her shoulders in wavy clusters, soft as silk flos. In order to avoid and repel impertinent and unnecessary questions, the young lady plays the part of Pamella, in regard to silence. She affects neither to hear nor to understand what is said around her. The Irish giant is also at the museum. He is not quite so tall as the Kentucky giant—but still could wade the Mississippi, where it is not too deep.—N. York Spectator.

The Rochester papers give us a fresh and terrible instance of the abuse of female trust and helplessness through the malign influence of ardent spirits. Austin Squires, a drunken husband —a desperado only when drunk—shot his wife on Tuesday evening of last week with a pistol, the ball entering through the back. Two infants were asleep in the cradle by her side! The brute fled, and was arrested in about two hours, but this faithful wife, faithful to the last, steadfastly acknowledge, even in her agonies, that she fell by her husband's hand! Noble woman! worthy of a better man.—Newark Daily.

A Problem solved.—A western editor says he has tried it both ways, and he has come to the deliberate conclusion that the single life is the most easy, but the married one the most happy. So Adam thought.

A letter of May 3d from the post master of Paduca, in Kentucky, gives a melancholy account of the destruction of that town by fire.—"Over one hundred and sixty houses were burnt, and only one insured. Most of the sufferers have not saved even a single article. A. & D. Smith, merchants, opened an assortment of goods worth $10,000, together with what was at their old store; Gale & Sharvis say $5000 more, all of which is totally gone, except some 1500 or 2000 dollars' worth saved. "In the room in which I kept the Post Office there was upwards of $15,000 in cash, and not one cent saved.

A Family Poisoned.—Mr. R. L. Burnett, near Galena, Ill. died a few days since, and his children were thrown into convulsions, by eating of the water parsnip, which like the wild parsnip, is a deadly poison. All umbelliferous water plants of yellow or white blossoms are generally poisonous.

Miss Davenport, a little girl only 11 years old, is about to appear in a New York theatre as the representative of Richard III, and other characters of Shakespeare. The London papers represent her as the most remarkable child ever known, surpassing all that is imagined of juvenile talent. She is the daughter of Councellor Thomas Davenport of Edinburgh. It is indeed a pity that he could find no better school for her.

By the death of Mr. Birch, of Philadelphia, the Institution for the instruction of the blind in that city, becomes the legatee of his property to the amount of at least one hundred thousand dollars. This is truly a munificent bequest, and will probably do immense good.

Twenty-fifth Congress.

Friday, May 11.

In the Senate, a number of remonstrances were presented, against the carrying into effect the treaty of New Echota with the Cherokee Indians.

Mr. Davis presented the resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, protesting against the annexation of Texas, as a measure unauthorized, impolitic and unjust.

In the house, Mr. Graves moved the printing of 20,000 copies of the journal and evidence, as the late duel. The motion prevailed.

Mr. Fairfield then claimed the printing of an equal number of the reports.

A motion to lay the whole subject upon the table was rejected, 57 yeas to 119 nays.

The morning hour being expired,

The house went into committee of the whole, (Mr. Ingham of Con. in the chair,) upon the bill to authorize the re-issue of Treasury notes, received before redeemable.

Saturday, May 12.

The Senate was engaged on private and unimportant business.

The house was engaged all day, and till after 1 o'clock, on Sunday morning, on the Treasury Note bill, without coming to any decision.

Monday, May 14.

In the Senate, Mr. William, of Maine, called the attention to the N. E. boundary, and spoke two hours on the question.

Remonstrances against the Cherokee treaty were presented. Mr. Webster spoke in their favor.

The bill for extending the charters of the banks of the district, occupied the remainder of the day.

The house suspended the rules, by a vote of 132 to 50, resolutions being the order of the day, and again took up the Treasury Note bill in committee of the whole.

At 7 o'clock, the committee rose, and the house adjourned without having come to any decision.

Tuesday, May 15th.

A number of memorials against the Cherokee treaty were presented, which gave rise to some debate. The remainder of the day was occupied with the bill to extend the charters of the district banks.

In the house, the morning hour was spent in a great variety of local and private business.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the Treasury Note bill, and a spirited debate on it was continued until 9 o'clock.

Wednesday, May 16.

In the Senate, Mr. Wright, from the committee on Finance, made a report in answer to Mr. Clay's currency resolution. The report gives a detailed account of the financial acts of the Government, from its formation to the present time. It defends the Treasury circular, and the prominent policy of the Administration.

After the report was read, which occupied 3 hours, it was ordered to be printed.

A motion to print thirty thousand extra copies was then made, and, after considerable debate, passed, 23 to 19. Among the yeas, were Benton, Calhoun and Webster.

A further consideration was then postponed to Monday next.

In the house Mr. Boon moved to suspend the rules, that he might offer a resolution asking for a recision of the Treasury circular. The vote stood, 111 yeas to 94 nays, not two-thirds.

The Treasury Note bill was then taken up, and after a long debate was read a third time and passed, by a majority of eight.

A Short Sermon.—"A word spoken in season, how good it is." And never probably was this proverb more truly verified than by the opportunities improved, as all opportunities should be, by faithful ministers of the gospel. The Rev. Rowland Hill was once on a sabbath afternoon walking in Cheapside, when he overheard a conversation between young men of gay appearance who were close behind him. "Where shall we go to this evening?" said one of them. "Wherever we can have a bit of fun," said the other. "Then let us go to old Rowley's Chapel, there will be some fun there." It was accordingly agreed upon, and while the worthy divine was reading the lesson in the evening, his eye discerned in the gallery near him, the very same young men whose conversation he had overheard. His text was taken from Psalm ix. 17—"The wicked will be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God." For a moment the minister paused, and then looking them full in the face, and pointing to them with all the dignity of his sacred office, repeated the awful denunciation of the text, exclaiming with solemn and startling emphasis—"There's fun for ye, my boys."—There was no mirth visible in their countenances during that sermon.

The Cincinnati Gazette of the 12th inst. says:

The river is full. Business is active upon the wharves. A short time since we saw 23 boats at once at the landing. The array of steamboat pipes, which is often seen lining our upper wharve contrasts in the mind singularly enough with the forests of fine spars, which encircle the city of Gotham. What we now have of these mysterious looking machines is nothing to what in a few years we will be found on the great ports on the Ohio. From 80 to 100 steamboats are now annually built on this river, and each year adds to the extent of the navigation, for which they are required.

The Red River is now navigable through the Raft. The Des Moines is beginning to be navigated, and new steamers are constantly added to the stock of navigable western waters.

Charleston Mass., has been embelished, and improved in consequence of a legacy of $500, in the will of the late Timothy Walker, for the purpose of planting ornamental trees in the public streets. At the annual town meeting, it was voted to add some hundreds of dollars to the above sum, for the same purpose. This excellent plan has been carried into effect, and the principal streets are now lined with beautiful young elms, which have been set out with great care. Every public highway and frequented avenue in our country should be lined with shade trees.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, May 22, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The Charter Election of the city of New Brunswick took place on Monday of last week. The result was to the Whigs most gratifying; as they elected all their candidates, by an average majority of 100. The vote was a very full one, both parties turning out in their greatest strength. The average whig vote was 401; the average Van Buren vote was 295.

We give a few of the officers elected.

Augustus R. Taylor, Mayor,
David W. Vail, Recorder.
Haley Fisk,
Samuel Baker, } Aldermen.
Frederick Richmond,

Mississippi Special Election.—Sufficient returns have been received to render it certain that the Whig candidates, Prentiss and Word, are elected representatives of the 25th Congress. It is probable that Prentiss' majority is about 500, and Word's 100 or 200.

No state in the Union has suffered so much from the recent revulsion as Mississippi; and to this cause the Van Buren party ascribe their defeat there.

The returns from Virginia have nearly all been received, and the result is rather more favorable to the Van Buren party than was anticipated a week or two since. All the counties except Lee are heard from, and the vote on joint ballot now stands 83 Van Buren men to 82 whigs. If Lee goes for the whigs there will be a tie; if for the other party, the administration will have a majority of two. Very probably, therefore, Mr. Rives will be re-elected senator, though he is not liked by either party.

Congress is slowly wending its weary way through the public business; but there is so much talking very little is doing. The session has now been continued near six months, and the amount of business done thus far will bear no proportion to this duration. If they proceed in the public business as fast as they have heretofore done, no conjecture can be formed as to when they will adjourn. The propensity to talking in our public assemblies has increased to an alarming degree, and to this is to be attributed the great length of sessions, and at the same time little being done. Though the administration party have the majority in both houses, this procrastination cannot be more attributed to them than to their opponents, for the whigs waste as much time in unavailing motions and interminable speeches as the others. Both parties, in our opinion, are in this thing blame-worthy.

The proceedings of Congress on Thursday, were of but little importance. The Senate passed an amendment to the bill to recharter the banks of the District, requiring them to have specie to the amount of one-third of their circulation.

The house, after an ineffectual attempt to reconsider the vote of Wednesday, passing the bill for the issue of Treasury Notes, took up a resolution, in regard to our Foreign Affairs, and our Territory west of the Rocky Mountains. Messrs. Cushing and Adams spoke at length and very ably on it.

Whig National Convention.—The National Intelligencer of Tuesday last, officially announces the appointment of a day and place for the whig National Convention, by the whig members of Congress, for the nomination of candidates for the office of President and Vice-President of the United States, to be run in opposition to the present administration. They recommend that Harrisburg, in Pennsylvania be the place, and the 1st Wednesday in December, 1839, be the time for holding such meeting. The meeting is to consist of delegates from all the states, in the proportion of their delegates in both houses of Congress.

We think the Whig members of Congress have acted wisely in thus postponing their nominations for a year and a half, to the close of the year 1839, for in that time the convention will be able to determine what candidate for President will be more likely to succeed, which would now be a very difficult thing.

The next Presidential election takes place in the fall of 1840, and the President elect takes his seat, March 4th, 1841.

The Directors of the Pennsylvania bank of the United States have made a donation of twenty thousand dollars to the sufferers by the late fire in Charleston. This is munificence worthy of a great institution, which should be recorded to its lasting honor.

A day of fasting, humiliation and prayer was appointed to have been held in Charleston, on the 3d inst. in consequence of their recent great calamity.

The New York Mirror, we are happy to say, still continues its weekly visits through our land, with no falling off in interest or talent. We still think it the best, as we believe it is also the eldest, of our literary periodicals. Since its establishment a thousand and one literary papers with much pretension "have arisen, flourished, and fallen," to rise no more; but the Mirror has continued "its ceaseless and unceasing course," each volume better than the last. We say heartily, may it live a thousand years, and at present there is no reason to suppose that it will not.

One great excellence in the Mirror is, that it is wholly American. Its original articles, steel and wood engravings are all the productions of American talent, and the Mirror in this way does much to improve American literature, and bring forward American talent. Indeed, in one sense, it is devoted to this great object, and to the keeping pure the English language in use among us. It employs, and liberally remunerates, the best talent in the country, in all its departments, and as such should receive the liberal support of Americans.

Its wood engravings both in design and execution we have never seen equalled, rivalling copper-plate engravings in appearance; and its steel engravings are equal to any ever produced by the artists of this country. In typographical execution also it will bear a comparison with the works of any nation.

A title page and index accompany each volume, which being in a suitable form for binding makes a large, cheap, interesting and valuable book.

The sixteenth volume commences on the 30th of next month, a prospectus of which we will publish as soon as received,

We have been looking forward for some time past with a good deal of anxiety to the meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, which met last week. The exscinded portion of the Church, called by a correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser, Constitutionalists, have sent delegates to the number of about 130. These met, previous to the time appointed for the meeting, and on Tuesday morning last adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That while we regard with deep sorrow the existing difficulties in our beloved church we would fondly hope that there are no insurmountable obstacles in the way of averting the calamities of a violent dismemberment, and securing such an organization as may avoid collisions and secure the blessings of a perpetuated harmonious action.

Resolved, That we are ready to co-operate in any efforts for pacification which are constitutional, and which shall recognize the regular standing and secure the rights of the entire Church, including those portions which the acts of the last Assembly were intended to exclude.

In the afternoon, the following was adopted:

Resolved, That a committee of three be now appointed respectfully to communicate the foregoing resolutions to those commissioners now in session in this city, who are at present inclined to sustain the decisions of the last general assembly, and inquire whether they will open a friendly conference for the purpose of ascertaing if some constitutional terms of pacification may not be agreed upon.

Dr. Hill, of Virginia, Judge Hall, of Delaware, and Dr. Fisher, of this state, were sent with this proposition. No answer was received to this until Wednesday afternoon, when the application was refused by the Reformers, as they have been called. The Constitutional convention then adopted this resolution:

Resolved, That should a portion of the Commissioners to the next General Assembly, attempt to organize the Assembly without admitting to their seats commissioners from all the Presbyteries recognized in the organization of the General Assembly of 1837, it will then be the duty of the Commissioners present to organize the General Assembly of 1838 in all respects according to the constitution, and to transact all other necessary business consequent upon such organization.

On Thursday, the Reforming Convention organized by choosing Rev. Mr. Plumer, of Virginia, Moderator, and Rev. E. Crane, of Long Island, clerk pro tem. The Constitutionalists organized, by choosing Dr. Fisher, moderator, Dr. E. Mason and Mr. Gilbert, clerks. Thus were two General Assemblies formed, each claiming to be the only true one.

The constitutional Assembly, by the advice of counsel, subsequently made a formal demand for the books, papers and commissions of the General Assembly, upon Messrs. McDowell and Krebs clerks of the last Assembly.

A late New Orleans paper says, that important despatches had just passed through there, from Texas, on their way to Washington. They were said to relate to a convention with Texas, which is to be submitted to the President and Senate for ratification. The New Orleans paper supposes that this convention is the last overture that the Texians mean to make to the U. States, and the New York Commercial Advertiser seems strongly inclined to hope that it may be so. It was but the other day the Texican congress told the world that their state should exist independently or not at all; and that especially could they seek no connexion with the U. States, seeing that the bare proposal was viewed with so much repugnance.

Disgraceful Mob in Philadelphia.

The Pennsylvania Hall, a large new building lately opened in Philadelphia, for free discussion on all subjects not immoral, was entirely destroyed by a mob on Thursday night last, in consequence of its having been occupied by an Anti-Slavery Convention of American women. The Convention in session there was very large, from various parts of the Union. The colors and sexes being promiscuously seated together, and passing in and out and through the streets in that manner, caused the excitement, which led to this great misfortune and disgrace.

The loss is estimated at $40,000; which by a law of the State, falls on the city. The proprietors have already made the demand.

On Wednesday evening about 3000 were in the hall to hear a lecture from Mr. Garrison and others. The audience was composed of white and black people, and about one half were females. The mob was very noisy, and broke the windows, but did no farther damage.

Of the proceedings on Thursday, the U. S. Gazette of Friday says:

During most of the day, yesterday, large numbers of persons were standing round the Hall, and it was evident that there was a purpose of injury.

In the afternoon the mayor went to some of the leading members of the society owning this building, and represented to them the great danger of continuing to hold their meetings, and he especially urged upon them the propriety of not assembling that evening, as he had every reason to believe that there was an organized mayor prepared to break up the meeting, and perhaps do injury to the building—and crowded as the walks must be by the company, this could not be done without personal injury and loss of life.

It was agreed to forego the evening meeting, and the mayor took the keys, and went out and addressed the persons then in the street, stating that there would be no meeting, and requested them as good citizens to retire. The people cheered the mayor, who returned to his office, placing persons to bring information of any attempt at injury, calling around him all his disposable force, and having some volunteers.

Early in the evening notice was given that a crowd had come down the street and was attacking the north side of the Hall; the mayor hastened up Pittsst. to Cherry with his force, and when he met the crowd which was dense and numerous, he sprung his rattle, and his police called upon the people to sustain the mayor, but not one person appeared to give aid. It was then seen that those who had assailed the building had broken open the doors and lower windows—obtained entrance and were beating out the upper windows.

By this time the Mayor and his police had attempted to arrest the course of destruction—but they were assailed with clubs, and almost every one severely wounded. Col. Watmough, the sheriff, also made an attempt to restore peace, and save the building but he was attacked, severely bruised and narrowly escaped.

We learn that the persons inside then gathered the benches, chairs and books in a heap, set fire to them, and then left the Hall. The engines hastened to the conflagration, but the firemen were not allowed to play on the building, but directed to play upon those houses endangered by the flame, so that before 10 o'clock the whole wood work of the Hall was entirely destroyed, and shortly afterward the crowd, which consisted of many thousands, began to disperse.

The Inquirer says—

Soon after 9 o'clock, the whole building was wrapped in flames, which diffused a lurid light around, and throwing their red reflections upon the multitude below, imparted a remarkable and fearful effect to the scene. Every window smoked and blazed before the progress of the devouring element.

FOREIGN.

The Silvie de Grasse arrived at New York with Havre papers to the 21st ult. The most important item is the defeat of the Russians in a battle with the Circassians. A Constantinople letter of the 14th March says—

The Circassians have just gained a complete victory. The Russian army is destroyed; all the works raised by the besiegers on the shore have been levelled to the earth. Thousands of Russians who have escaped from the carnage have taken refuge in Erzeroum. This has given rise to a report that they had taken forcible possession of the town.

Marshall Sebastiani has been appointed Ambassador Extraordinary at London, on the occasion of the coronation of Queen Victoria. The coronation of the Emperor of Austria, at Milan, which is also about to take place, divides public attention with the English solemnity.

There had been an unprecedented scramble at Vienna for the stock of a Railroad—30,000 persons having been assembled to subscribe, and a battalion of grenadiers was called in to keep order!

Cincinnati.—Fifty years ago this day, as we learn from one of the party about sixty four persons landed at the junction of the Ohio and Muskingum rivers, under the command of Gen. Rufus Putnam, and commenced the settlement of the state of Ohio in the presence of nearly three hundred Indians, who had assembled, on the opposite side of the Muskingum. The landing took place at 10 o'clock of a bright and beautiful spring morning. What a change have these fifty years produced in Ohio, its dark forests have been swept away before the axe of the settler—farms, towns and cities now occupy the site of the wigwam, the steamboat has taken the place of the canoe, and a population of a million and upwards exists on the same territory that supplied a scanty subsistence to a few hundreds of roving savages. Such a rapid and entire change is without a precedent in the history of the world.—Nashville Union, April 27.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegemble Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Illness after meals, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.—Their effects are taken according to the directions, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain, excite action in the liver and produce its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ For those giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at this Office where the Pills are for sale. 1 tf

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York.

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, when any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired.

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

THADEUS DAVID'S

WRITING FLUID,

A Substitute for Ink, for the Steel or Quill Pen.

THE superiority of this Fluid over common Inks, may be summed up under the following heads: The ease with which it flows from and follows the pen, the superior blackness which it acquires, the clearness with which it writes, its bright and distinct color when first written, also its drying so quickly, remaining fluid in all weathers, having no tendency to become ropy or muddy, never having any sediment; and lastly, its greater Durability, and its ability to resist the agents used to obliterate the common inks, renders it particularly valuable for writing Bills of Exchange, Wills, Deeds, and also Log books as it cannot be impaired by Sea air.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE
New York Mirror.

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly esteemed Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts: embellished with magnificent and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood, and rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and containing articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original poetry—tales and essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors in literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. The best writers in the land will contribute to its pages, and a spirited foreign correspondence will be maintained. The sum of $5000 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume. Besides which, choice translations from the French, German, Italian and Spanish; and Selections from popular journals abroad will serve to give it variety, and render it one of the most piquant fascinating and select repositories of elegant literature and the fine arts extant.

Its Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the arrangements entered into and consummated for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second of July next, warrant us in the pledge that, in every respect, but particularly in the literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its pre-eminent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most vaunted popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on beautiful paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars *per annum, payable in advance. No subscrip*tions received for a less term than one year.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Somerset Orphans' Court.
Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of James Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due no*tice being given, be forever barred of his or her* action against the said administrators.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the said administrators give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within one year from this time, by setting up such notice in five of the most public public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefor against the said administrators.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in Maynext, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each comprise a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

HUSBANDRY.

From the Farmers' Cabinet.

What will an acre of land produce?

In 1822, I enclosed an acre of land in the vicinity of Wilmington for the purpose of trying this experiment. I erected upon the ground a small house, and leased it to a gardener to work for one half the produce. The ground was enclosed in such a manner, as to leave an exact acre under cultivation. It was at first ploughed deep the stones all carefully pitched off, then highly manured, and afterwards worked the first 5 years with a spade. I furnished the gardener with about forty dollars worth of manure annually, and sent a man, horse and cart, twice a week to draw the produce to market. Every means was used to raise the amount of sales to the highest point; seeds of the choicest kinds of vegetables were procured, forcing beds erected, and the produce ripened early, and sold in the market at a high price.

The average produce of my share for the first five years, was $174 20 cts. per annum, consequently, the whole amount produced by this acre of land was not less than $348 40 cts. per annum, besides the vegetables used in the gardener's family.

The gardener and his little family consisting of three persons, had other perquisites, by which they obtained about $100 annually, in addition to their share of the garden; by which they were enabled to live in comfort, and could have indulged occasionally in some of the luxuries of life if they had chosen so to do. But like most other workers of the soil in this country, they wanted more land, and till it with a plough and a horse.

In order to gratify this disposition, I enclosed them another acre, and lent them a horse, plough and occasionally a man to work it, and continued the same outlayings for manure as in the former case.

The consequence of this change was, that I received less per annum for the second five years than the first.

The family now became dissatisfied with their situation, nothing would do but more land; they complained of their labor being increased, and their income diminished; they had sometimes to hire and they had no money to pay the laborer; they had many other difficulties to encounter, all of which were ascribed to the smallness of their farm. I was now as much dissatisfied as they were, for we could not agree about the cause of our unsuccessful efforts; but as no other way opened at the time, I enclosed about two acres more for a third five years experiment, which terminated in my receiving less income than in the second five years, and not much over one half the amount of the first five. So much for increasing the size of farms without, "being kind to the soil."

The result of these experiments correspond with all the known facts that have come under my observation for the last thirty years upon the subject of the profits of capital expended in agricultural pursuits.

I at first adopted the opinion that the secret of gathering money out of the soil lay in small farms, but extended observation of facts and mature deliberation has changed this conclusion. I now believe the quantity of land has nothing to do with the profits of the capital expended for agricultural purposes.

I found $5000 expended upon 100 acres of poor land in the neighborhood of Wilmington, would not produce after paying all expenses more than 5 per cent. upon the capital, but by dividing the amount in expenses for manure and making the sum laid out $10,000 it would more easily nett $1,200 per annum; that is, the profits of the capital laid out in land produced an interest of 5 per cents. per annum, and the capital laid out in manure produced 20 per cent.

The simple fact of the vast difference between the profits of capital expended in land, and in the improvements explains the diversity of opinion that exists upon the profits of agriculture, and a knowledge of this is in my opinion of incalculable advantage to the community. If the above hasty sketch should elicit the spirit of inquiry, and put into operation some practical experiments among the readers of the Cabinet, it will amply satisfy a SUBSCRIBER.

A Household Establishment.—A wife, two children and a good fire on a cold day, a rocking chair and a newspaper.—N. Y. Express.

We think it would be an improvement to take away one of the children and add another newspaper.—Boston Times.

The Times is wrong,—the Express is right. Two children are better than one, as they would keep each other quiet; an important consideration in making up the sum total of matrimonial comfort.

A violent Discussion has been going on at St. Louis, (Mo.) in the Presbyterian Church, relative to the propriety of introducing the bible into the city schools.

Right; the discussion will do good. Who ever knew the truth defeated in a fair and open encounter.

The passengers on board a steam boat on the Mississippi, for a gross offence supposed to have been committed by a colored man, the cook of the steam boat, tied his hands behind him so that he could not use them, and threw him overboard and drowned him.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Life is like a week.

Monday.—We know not exactly how it begins; but on Monday, its first day, only look around, and you will see the general pursuit of human kind is suction. It is called Saint Monday—a fit and congenial appellation with the holy innocency of childhood. At this early stage in the division of time, the oracle of truth is listened to with attention, as at the sacred well of Rabelais, and faithfully obeyed in his admonition to "trine, trine, trine!" Nature is pliant and pliable; stubbornness of character has not superceded instinct: and, though neither man for child can walk alone, they are not too proud to receive aid and support in their helpless condition.

Tuesday.—The leading-strings and rocking-chair are gone. We can not only walk but we can run. Green are the fields beneath our feet, clear is the firmament above our heads; and, lo! the butterflies of spring are dancing and careering before us in the lightsome air. This is our day to give them chase. Many escape; but some are caught, of fragile frame and evanescent hue. We hug and admire our treasures—our first victories in life, the bright rewards of our first exertion and perseverance. The flies are our own. Pity 'tis, that the moment of their seizure is the moment of their destruction.

Wednesday.—Ah! how different is the pursuit to-day, yet how much the same! and how little have we learned by the lesson of yesterday! Love has sprung up in the bosom, and woman is the object of our desire. The purple light of passion enshrines the visible world with a haze, a color, that imparts at once a depth and a glow, altering the form and aspect of all things. From one grand and prevading idea within the heart, emanates that strange medium which encompasses with whatever the eye beholds, or the senses endeavour to appreciate. In love, by love, with love, through love, the conversion is complete; and the mid-day of life's week is a wonderful phenomenon. But, alas! as on the preceding day, there are many disappointments. Alas! still more; in some instances, the triumph is attained. Soon does the purple light become gray, and the visible world return to its own plain and sombre shapes. The butterflies have mouldered into dust and their successors——. But let us proceed to Thursday. Ambition fills the soul. The lethal strife of war; the struggle for pre-eminence wheresoever the mind and tongue of man may be engaged in intellectual conflict; the fierce contention for superior wealth or power, or fame: the emulation for a place for self, however small in extent, and little in advance; such are the darker efforts of the second mid-day. There is yet a stir in the blood, an excitement in the stormy game, a glory in the final success. If we are not happy, we are busy; if we have no time for enjoyment, we have at least a time for discontent. The fires of hope, so far from being extinguished, continue to burn, perhaps more steadily than before; and toil and pleasure, and chagrin and expectation, and failure and stimulus pass our Thursday hastily away.

Friday.—Avarice, cold, bloated, and selfish, succeeds to the sole command. The greedy is more ravenous; the miser more unnatural; the sensual, parsimonious; and the very prodigal, savings. Cold is the idol of this period; the dross which cannot smooth, but makes the bed of sickness an uneasy bed of care, though it may gild the gaudy coffin, and plume the showy hearse. The voice of wisdom has ceased to have the slightest influence over the mind of the besotted man. He grasps with the greater energy at what is the more useless, as he must leave it as soon as clutched. The longings of Monday, of Tuesday, of Wednesday, of Thursday, have all some semblance of reason, and some recommendation for the human race; but the second mid-day miserwretch who at this stage of existence lives only to oppress and grind his fellow creatures is a monster to be abhorred, and neither pitied among the weaknesses, nor excused among the follies, nor pardoned among the errours of mankind.

Saturday.—We are tired with the long continued labor. Our stiffened limbs have forgotten the buoyant activity of the butterfly hunt; our over-laden memories, the mad and dazzling feelings of the succeeding chase; our wearied spirits the agitating impulses of our ambitious day; and our stricken conciences array in dread before us the perdition of our worldly guilt. What seek we now but repose; to return to childhood again, to be quiet, to be sustained, to be nursed and upheld to be troubled no more?

The Sabbath.—Life and the week are over. The Sabbath of the grave and of rest is ours.—Oblivion hath fallen upon the past, with all that hath charmed or afflicted, soothed or embittered blessed or wronged its fleeting hours. Oh that looking back thereon may encourage us to look forward with humble confidence! and that we may be able to comfort ourselves with the thought that during this week of life we have done our best to make the paths of our brother-sojourners paths of peace and joy! Did men but do so, how much brighter would be the days, and how much sooner the nights, of all the in-dwellers of the earth!

As it is, we are only aware of the prevalence of such dispositions, and such a system of conduct in the president, vice, secretary, treasurer, and common members of the "(Nothing?) New Under the Sun Society:" who have unanimously agreed that this paper is a novelty, and worthy of the Magazine which, being only a year old, is deserving of being another.—Bently's Miscellany.

If a man of 22 years of age, begin to save a dollar a week, and put it to interest every year, he would have, at 31 years of age, six hundred and fifty dollars: at 41, one thousand six hundred and eighty; at 51, three thousand six hundred and eighty; at 61, six thousand one hundred and fifty; and at 71, eleven thousand five hundred dollars. When we look at these sums, and when we think how much temptation and evil might be avoided in the very act of saving them, and how much good a man in humble circumstances may do for his family by these sums, we cannot help wondering that there are not more savers of $1 a week.

Is the Temperance Cause a Failure?

In October last, as the train of cars between Philadelphia and New York stopped at the half way place, while the locomotive and tender were being supplied with wood and water, several of the passengers got out to stretch their limbs and look round. In the apartment where our informant sat, (a valuable member of the legislature of New York,) was a red faced, genteel wine-drinker; and within a few feet of them, in full sight, was the bar, "with all that could tempt the eye and please the depraved taste" of the quaffer of alcoholic stimulus. Said the genteel wine-drinker to an intelligent looking young man, "Friend, just pass this fip, and tell the barkeeper to hand me a glass of his best Maderia;" who with a low bow replied, "Excuse me, sir; I am pledged not to furnish it to others, as well as not to use it myself." A slight blush, and a bite of the lip, and the sixpence was returned to the pocket. But soon it was between the thumb and finger, and extended towards another passenger who was walking by, with "Please, sir, hand this fip and order me a glass of wine." "Sir," said the fellow passenger, "I think it wrong to drink poison, and cannot therefore, be a partaker with you sir." A deeper crimson suffused his cheek, and a curl of the lip, indicative of deep chagrin, marked the countenance of the wine drinker. At that moment the cry, "All aboard! all aboard!" was heard. The fip still remained clenched between the thumb and finger of the red-faced gentlemen, and he evidently was very unwilling to lose his accustomed stimulus; so, with the cry "All aboard!" he laid his hand, with the fip in it, on the shoulder of a very pleasant-looking young man, who was standing between him and the bar and said, "Just pass this, and order me a glass of wine, quick!" With a smile of conscious superiority, the young gentleman replied, "I am in the situation of the two young gentlemen you have already asked." Our informant, the Hon. F. G., is also a "cold water man." The wine-drinker sat pensive, and made no farther attempt to procure alcoholic stimulus, until they arrived at New York. We hope he did not then, and never more will. Firmness coupled with gentlemanly decision, on the part of the friends of Temperance, especially when they travel and mingle with their fellow men, would do much to correct the fashion, as it regards the use of intoxicating drinks.—Alb. Temp. Rec.

Are your Children ashamed of you?—At the last monthly concert for Sabbath schools, in the northwestern section of the city, the following circumstance was related, and the congregation will long remember it. A family had removed from the neighborhood where their little girl had long attended the Sabbath school and church of God; but another school was found where she still received the instructions of a pious teacher. From this school, however, she returned home at the hour of church worship, to which she had not been accustomed, and which gave occasion to her mother, who never attended the house of God herself, to ask;

"Why did you not remain?"

"There are no seats for children," replied she.

"Then you should have asked your teacher to give you a seat," said the mother.

"And so I did," replied the child; "when she told me to go and sit with my mother; and mother, I was ashamed to tell her you did not come to church."

That gentle and affectionate reproof reached a mother's heart; she sought the house of God, and now rejoices in the hope of eternal life. Are your children ashamed of you?

Mr. J. Q. Adams.—We take the following sentence from a letter by this ex traordinary man, declining an invitation to the late anniversary of the Anti-Slavery Society, in New York. It is a wholesome rebuke for delinquent members of Congress—

"My public duties will detain me here probably through the whole month of May. During the session of Congress, I do not hold myself at liberty to absent myself voluntarily from the service of the House, a single day; such is my estimate of the representative's duty, confirmed by a positive rule of the House itself, not the less obligatory for being little observed. It will not, therefore, be in my power to attend the meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society upon their anniversary, but my best wishes will be with them, that their institution may be blessed with the smile and approbation of Heaven.

"Money at the last dates was so plentiful in England, as, in some instances, to have been put out to interest for short periods at one per cent per annum. With the superior investments which may be made in this country, a part of that capital will assuredly make its way hither.

POETICAL.

For the Plainfield Union.

" My Heart is now in the merry Spring."

Song.

[Set to music by E. Ives, junr. principal of the New York Conservatorio.]

My heart is now in the merry, merry Spring,
And the world seems strewed with flowers!
But, they tell me, time is on the wing,
And bringeth its tiresome hours.

So if tears must be mine,
Let me sing while I may;
And bask in the sunshine
Of youth's joyous day.

And why not sing, when the birds of air
Are chanting such blithesome lays?
When the face of nature its smile doth wear,
And the streamlet so cheerily plays?

O, if tears must be mine,
Let me sing while I may;
And bask in the sun shine
Of youth's joyous day.

For if thorns ere long do pierce my heart,
And clouds o'er my path-way lower;
I know there is One who can smiles impart
To brighten the darkest hour,

Then if tears must be mine,
Let me sing while I may;
And bask in the sun shine
Of youth's joyous day!

E. C. S.

Cedar-Brook, May, 1838.

For the Plainfield Union.

To a Mother on the death of her child.

Young mother! what can feeble friendship say
To soothe the anguish of this mournful day?
They, they alone whose hearts like thine have bled,
Know how the living sorrow for the dead.
Each tutored voice that seeks such grief to cheer
Strikes cold upon the weeping parent's ear:
I've felt it all.—Alas! too well I know
How vain all earthly power to heal thy woe.
God cheer thee, childless mother! 'tis not given,
For man to ward the blow that falls from Heaven;
I've felt it all—as thou art feeling now;
Like thee, with stricken heart and aching brow,
I've sat and watched by dying beauty's bed,
And burning tears of hopeless anguish shed;
I've gazed upon the sweet and pallid face,
And vainly tried some comfort there to trace;
I've listened to the short and struggling breath,
I've seen the cherub eye grow dim in death!
Like thee I've veiled my head in speechless gloom
And laid my first-born in the silent tomb.

PLUTO.

Something Singular.—The Lawrenceburg Indiana Beacon of Saturday week, has the following.

We have been credibly informed that on the evening of the 13th inst., a daughter of Mr. Williams, near Williamsburg in this county, died of the small pox, or was supposed to be dead. That she was dressed in her grave clothes, and laid out in the usual manner, set up with all night and on the following morning was found to be alive. She is still living and represented to be convalescent. We cannot vouch for the truth of the story, although it has been more than once represented to us as an absolute certainty.

The Jerseyman states that the first of June is the time appointed to put another engine and train of cars on the Morris and Essex Railroad. The increase of business would warrant it sooner but the necessary arrangements cannot be made before that time.

The Commissioners of the Morris and Easton Railroad met in Morris Town last week to make preparations for prosecuting that work. The Report of the engineers may be expected in a few days. It is added that the grade in no instance between Morris and Easton will exceed 60 feet to the mile. If so, our New York friends will get their fuel at a greater reduction in price.

ASTONISHING DISCLOSURE—Christian treatment of the Indians on the Columbia River.—A friend has put into our hands for publication, the following extract from a letter from Rev. Mr. Spalding, missionary on Columbia River, dated Feb. 16, 1837. It requires no comment. The truth of the disclosures cannot be doubted although they are almost too wicked to be believed.—Boat. Cour.

"Even at this great remove from the fountain of moral corruption, a small rivulet now and then may be seen. Every year a greater or less number of Nez Perces are taken to St. Louis, and return, if their constitutions outride the storms of intemperance and licentiousness, to scatter the seeds of moral death among their unsuspecting countrymen. Nor have I yet, I fear, caused to be burnt all the packs of cards which have been sold for the Bible to the inoffensive people, long seeking for, and offering any price to get hold of that precious book. So the Devil is found in sheep's clothing, even on the Rocky Mountains. They tell me they have sometimes given a horse for a pack of cards, which they were told was positively the Word of God; but which they now call the book from below. They tell me they have for some time distrusted 'people that would bring fire waters' to the mountains, drink it, and then kill each other."

From the Journal of the American Institute.

Legislature of New York.—As the session has closed, it will prove interesting what laws have been passed in aid of domestic industry.

1st. The auction monopoly is broken down. Any one, by conforming to the requirements of the law, may avail himself of this mode of selling.

2d. The privilege of exclusive banking may be considered as brought to a termination. The charters of existing institutions continue unrepealed; but provision is made that individuals or associations may put into operation safe banks, free from the trammels of safety fund laws, and to unlimited amounts; but security must be given to the state, in the full amount of all the bills of such banks that can be put in circulation. To insure the certainty of this, no bills of the bank can be used, but such as are handed over by the Comptroller, who receives and holds the security In case the bills are not redeemed in specie on demand, it is the duty of the comptroller, on short notice, to dispose of the security and redeem them. Such a new species of paper money bottomed upon the most undoubted security and, of course, of a higher order than has ever before been employed, is hereafter to become a circulating medium. Banking associations with heavy capitals, will no doubt be formed under this law, and a competition will spring from it, which will greatly abridge the profits, and cripple the influence of the old banks. Associations of large capitalists, by the power which they may derive under this law, will be enabled to regulate the value of their currency, and prevent its depreciation, by checking excessive issues, which before they could not

The advantage which the community will derive, will be steadiness in prices; and productive labor will be benefited thereby, inasmuch as more safe calculations may be made on the future effects of present undertakings. The flux and reflux in the great monetary tides, which expansion and contraction occasion, will not be entirely prevented, but they will be essentially mitigated. One bank of controlling capital will no doubt spring up in our emporium, which will obtain a large share of the government deposites and acquire a powerful credit abroad. It will be directed by men of experience, skilled in money operations. It will be in the power of the directors, and no doubt they will deem it their interest, to check the extravagance of smaller institutions. It is, however, to be feared, that its intimate connection with foreigners and foreign trade will not be likely to command for home industry any peculiar favours; but manufacturing and mechanic enterprise, industry and skill, have constantly advanced in the face of adversity and we think they are destined to continue to advance, and finally to triumph. If we were to advise, we should recommend a meeting of the leading manufacturers and mechanics, to concert measures for the establishment, under the new banking law, in this commercial emporium, of a powerful bank, to be directed by the friends of home industry. An early movement would secure, in all probability, a large amount of capital, that otherwise will fall into hands which will direct it principally to the advancement of foreign trade, and thereby increase the manufacturing productions of other countries, instead of our own.

Whatever cheapens and expedites the means of transportation, promotes agriculture, manufactures and the arts. The legislature have made appropriations, the present session, to aid the construction of the two important rail-roads; one extending from Hudson, a few miles from the city of New-York, to Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, passing through a range of counties, between four and five hundred miles in length; the other, from Catskill, about thirty six miles below Albany: Canajoharie, which is from sixty to seventy miles west of Albany; the aggregate length of these roads will be about a hundred and fifty miles. The aid to be afforded these rail-roads is in the form of loans, viz;—$350,000 to the Cattskill, & $3,000,000 to the N. York and Erie Rail-roads; this, no doubt, will insure the completion of these two great undertakings. Their influence on the agriculture of those secluded regions through which tracks are to be made, and the effect of opening to them the great markets of the seaboard, need not to be enlarged upon. The increase of water power made available to manufacturers and the arts; the exchanges that will emanate from the increased industry, put in requisition by the facilities of transportation, cannot but be a source of abundant wealth.

The widening and deepening the New York and Erie Canal, through its whole line, has also been approved by this legislature.

Connected with industry and every other thing meritorious and desirable, is the cause of education. For its promotion the income of the surplus revenue has been appropriated—chiefly for common school education. The residue, to promote the higher branches of literature, has been bestowed on colleges and academies.

It has been observed by a great statesman, that but a single step is taken in a generation. The present age surely is an exception. The auction and banking systems were monopolies, considered a few days since, so firmly established that no power could make an impression upon them. They have been dissipated into atoms by the power of public opinion operating on an independent legislature.

The great question is settled. Internal improvements will go on accelerated by the whole energies of our great state.

This legislature has taken a lively interest in common school education. Every patriot must approve of what it has done. Our property, liberty and lives, depend on the intelligence of the people; and every step taken to extend education to them, strengthens and perpetuates our institutions and our liberties. The small portion appropriated for sowing the seeds of literature and science, by means of our colleges and academies, cannot fail to return a hundred fold.

Remarkable Election.—The Columbia (S. C.) Telegraph of the 21st inst. says—" Two or three weeks ago an election was held for warden of this town, and B. Hart received 99 votes and B. Riley 99. Another election was held on Tuesday, when B. Hart received 143 votes and B. Riley 143. Another attempt at a decision must be made."

Twenty-fifth Congress.

Friday, May 18.

The Senate was engaged all day in an animated debate on the Treasury note bill, which passed the House on Thursday. This bill passed the Senate at 7 o'clock, without amendment, by a vote of 27 to 13.

In the House, Mr. E. Whittlesey succeeded in procuring an observance of the rule which devotes Friday and Saturday to private bills, and business of that nature was contracted.

Monday, May 21st.

In the Senate, Mr. Clay presented a petition for a U. S. Bank and stated his views on the subject at length. This created some sparring between him and Mr. Buchanan. The remainder of the session was occupied with the bill to extend the District bank charters. Mr. Benton's substitute, limiting the extension to July 1840, and imposing all the party restrictions, was adopted by a vote of 24 to 19.

The House was occupied two or three hours with presentation of petitions, on almost every subject.

The Indian appropriation bill was taken and progressed in.

Tuesday, May 22d.

In the Senate, memorials on the subject of the Cherokee treaty were presented, laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The bill to extend the charters of the District banks was read a third time and passed.

A message was received from the President to both houses in relation to the Cherokee treaty.

In the House, a resolution was adopted that they should hereafter meet at 10, instead of 11, as heretofore.

A message was received from the President of the United States, in relation to the Cherokees, submitting a proposition made by the Secretary of War, to the Cherokees. It proposes to grant an additional sum of money to that specified in the treaty, and asks an appropriation from Congress for that purpose. It also provides an extension of time for the completion of their removal. It was read, referred to the committee on Indian affairs and ordered to be printed.

The House then resumed the consideration of the President's message in relation to the occupancy of the territory beyond the Rocky mountains.

Wednesday, May 23.

The Senate adopted the following resolution offered by Mr. Clay, without dissent.

Resolved, that the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster General severally inform the senate whether any orders have been given from their departments, to receive the notes of banks for revenue, and if any, what were those orders: and if any instructions have been given, that they communicate to the Senate what those instructions are.

The subject of the North Eastern boundary came up, and a message from the President with accompanying documents on that subject was received. They were laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The house disposed of several private claims and took up the subject of the late duel, till the explication of the morning hour.

The senate bill to recharter the District banks was taken up, read twice and referred to the committee on the District.

The Cherokee treaty was debated with much animation during the remainder of the day, in which a disposition was manifested to do the Cherokees justice.

Not to be Cheated.—It is the boast of the hardy fishermen and coasters of the North that they can tell the whereabouts without any other instrument than lead, and with no other observation than a scrutiny of the sand brought from the bottom upon it. A famous anecdote in Nantucket, is told of one Captain Bunker, a branch of the great amphibious family of Bunkers. Being sick and below, he directed that the lead should be brought down to his berth for his inspection.—The craft belonged to Nantucket, and it was in sand ballast. The mate of the vessel, some what of a wag, and doubter of the Captain's infallibility wet the lead, and dipping it in the ballast carried it down to the berth. Old Captain Bunker's eyes dilated with astonishment as he asked, "Do you say that you got this sand by sounding?"

'Yes sir.'

"Then Nantucket's sunk, and we are right over Tupper's Hill!"

The mate went on deck.

SUGAR BEET.—The culture of this root is moderately extending in this state. Every account which we have received from those who have paid any attention to it as a field crop, is favorable; and those who have experimented upon it as a source from which to obtain sugar, also speak in its favor. The pressure of the times has prevented the operation of the Societies which have been formed to carry on the raising of the beet and the manufacturing of sugar on the great scale; and it has been left for individuals, who have moved slowly and cautiously in the business. There is this consideration in the favor of the beet culture;—It is a valuable root for cattle, horses, hogs and if the sugar business is found to be unprofitable, the crop will still yield a profit, as an article for feeding and fattening animals.

It is a hardy root—easily cultivated—wanting only a well pulverized and fertile soil to ensure success. The Genesee Farmer mentions as a fact, that mutton fattened by this root had a peculiar sweet and pleasant flavor.—Maine Farmer.

Land Ho!—The Pennsylvania Bank of the U. States, we have good reason to believe, is making preparations to resume specie payments. It will be recollected that the condition on which we offered to lend so large an amount of specie, was resumption. This bank is the only obstacle to resumption this side of Georgia. We shall soon have specie payments through the whole Atlatic coast. If the brokers would rub their eyes and take one good look, we reckon the blindest of them might begin to see land.—Jour. of Com.

VARIETY.

Tooth Powder.—"What is this tooth powder that is so much talked about in the Boston newspapers, my love?" said a Dulcinea to her John in the back settlements. "Oh, nothing," said John, "it's a sort of powder which the doctors use to blow up teeth with, as we do rocks, when they can't get them out in any other way."

"Ah Jerry!" said a good-natured matron the other day to her son, then an eminent Judge in his native state,—"Ah Jerry, you needn't despise the wheel, for I spun many a day to send you to college."

Few persons have any just conceptions of the value of coal mines. A recent report to the legislature of Massachusetts states that Pennsylvania derives annually four millions, and Great Britain $12,000,000 directly from coal mines. Besides this, incalculable advantages arise in the application of this fuel, to the arts.

The house of Mr. Job Sayre of Elizabethtown was robbed on Saturday night before last of $145 in money besides various valuable papers, for the recovery of which Mr. S. offers a liberal reward.

The famous Harriet Livermore was among the passengers in the Susquehannah, recently arrived at Philadelphia from Europe. She has been on a visit to Jerusalem.

The Legislature of Nova Scotia has granted an act of incorporation for forming a company with a capital of £200,000 sterling, for the purpose of establishing a ship canal from the Bay of Fundy to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, across the Isthmus of Cumberland, between any part of the Cumberland basin, and Rayberte.

Counterfeit bills for $1,50 on the Merchants Bank, Newport, R. I. well executed are in circulation.

A smoky house, an unfaithful servant, a stumbling horse, a scolding wife, an empty purse, an undutiful child, an aching tooth, an incessant talker, and a dull razor, are some of the great plagues of the present day.

The N. Y. Courier says that a company is now forming in Liverpool with a capital of £500,000 to build steamboats to run between Liverpool and New York.

A German philosopher has just published a large work in answer to the question, "How does the sun arrive at truth?" We have not read the work, and therefore do not know how it is done in Germany; but in the United States men arrive at truth by "reading the newspaper."

The giving the election of Sheriffs in Connecticut to the people, has passed both houses of the Legislature.

Frank Johnson the celebrated colored musician arrived with his band from London to the Philadelphia.

Ho for Illinois!—There is yet a chance for some fine farms in Illinois. 12,714,963 acres of public land remain unsold.

It is stated in the ancient records of the city of London, "that no person is eligible to be returned as an alderman unless he is of lawful person, wise, grave, wealthy, faithful, generous, and not to be of mean and servile condition, so as to disparage the place of the city.

It is stated that a law will go into immediate operation in the state of Maine, providing that a divorce from the bands of matrimony may be decreed, in case either of the parties is, or shall become a common drunkard, and shall so continue for the space of three years.

New Jersey Game law.—According to a recent law of New Jersey, no partridge, moorfowl, grouse, quail or rabbit, shall be killed between the 1st of November and the 10th of January; and no woodcock between January and July, under a penalty of one dollar for each offence—the person in whose possession the game is found to be considered the offender.

The Philadelphia U. S. Gazette states that a quantity of cotton goods imported into New York as silk, and consequantly without duties, and sent to Philadelphia for sale, were a few days since seized by some of the Philadelphia Custom House Officers.

During the 48 hours ending on the 13th inst., there were 15 steamboat arrivals at Cincinnati, and 16 departures.

The Ohio Canal is now navigable throughout its whole extent.

The people of St. Joseph, on Lake Michigan are doing a great business in the Sturgeon line. They are harpooning them by scores—some weighing over 135 pounds. Below the dam of Miskawaka, on the St. Joseph, there were taken, says the South Bend Free Press, on the night of May 6th, with spears, 23 sturgeons, measuring from 4 to 6 1-2 feet in length. About 150 had been taken within the preceding three weeks.

The Salem Banner mentions that Richard Somers, of U. P. Neck township, in that county, sent some potatoes of this year's growth to the Philadelphia market, on Wednesday, the 16th inst. They were about as large as walnuts.

Longevity of early Christians and others.—"It is surprising to what a great age the eastern christains, who retired from the persecutions into the deserts of Egypt and Arabia, lived healthful on a very little food. We are informed by Cassian, that the common measure for 24 hours was about 12 ounces, with only pure water for drink: St. Anthony lived to 105 years, on mere bread and water, adding only a few herbs at last. On a similar diet James the hermit lived to 104. Arsonius, the tutor of the emperor Arcadius, to 120 Sixty-five years in society, and fifty-five in the desert. St. Epiphanus, to 115; St. Jerome, to 100; Simeon Stylites, to 109; and Romualdus to 120.

"And it is wonderful in what sprightliness, strength, activity, and freedom of spirits, a low diet even here in England, will preserve those who have habituated themselves to it. Buchanan informs us of one Laurence, who preserved himself to 140, by the mere force of temperance and labor. Spotswood mentions one Kentigern (otherwise called St. Mungah, or Monge, from whom the famous well in Wales is named) who lived to 180; and who, he came to years of understanding, never tasted wine or strong drink, and slept on the cold ground. My worthy friend Mr. Webb, is still alive. He by the quality ness of the faculties of his mind, and the activity of his body, shows the great benefit of a low diet; living altogether on vegetable food, and pure water. Henry Jenkins lived to 169 years, on a low, coarse and simple diet. Thomas Parr died at the age of 152, years and nine months. His diet was coarse bread, milk, cheese, whey, and small beer; and his historian tells us, that he might have lived a good while longer if he had not changed his diet, and air; coming out of a clear thin air, into the thick air of London, and being taken into a splendid family, where he fed high, drank plentifully of the best wines, and as a necessary consequence, died in a short time. Dr. Lister mentions eight persons in the north of England, the youngest of whom was above 100 years, and the eldest was 140. He says, "it is to be observed that the food of all this mountainous country is exceedingly coarse."—Cheyne's Essay on Long Life.

Important from the West Indies.—A Barbadoes paper of the 17th ult states that the Council of that Island, have unanimously come to the determination to abolish the Apprenticeship on the first of August proximo. The assembly had not as yet, occurred. That it will concur, it is said, there is little doubt. In the Island of Antigua, when the British government resolved upon the gradual process of emancipation by the apprenticeship system, the planters preferred immediate abolition, and on the 4th of August 1834 the slaves were all emancipated. A similar measure was adopted in Montserrat in January, and with the happiest results.—The planters employ their former slaves at low wages, and it is stated that they do better than before the change. The Moravians have several missionaries in these islands, and their self-denying labors appear to have been productive of the best fruits.—There is a proposition before the Chamber of Deputies to abolish slavery in the French Islands.

Exchanges.—During the last week one quarter of the difference between New York money and that of the cities South and West of us has disappeared. This is a very satisfactory reply to the forebodings that resumption in New York would enhance the discount on the South and West. The fact is that resumption has a propitious opposite effect, for it convinces the banks which were expanding improperly, that at no distant time they also must resume. So they manage their affairs on a more healthy plan, and the effects are immediately seen. If New York had consented to the irredeemable policy, banks disposed to act erroneously would have felt safe in depreciating their paper to any extent.—Journ. of Com.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, May 29, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

By the Nashville Banner of the 13th inst. we have full returns from the Mississippi special election. Prentiss and Word, the whig candidates are both elected, by the following majorities:—Prentiss' over Claiborne, 903; over Davis 1,281—Word's majority over Claiborne, 270; over Davis, 748.

The average whig majority is 825.

Linn Banks, the Van Buren candidate from the district lately represented by Mr. Patton, has taken his seat in the House. His majority over Mr. Slaughter was 43; a very close run.

Patterson, in this State, has also been disgraced by a mob and riot. The progress of evil example in our country is fearfully rapid, and there is no telling where it will stop, unless in the subversion of our dearest rights and liberties. An abolition society was formed in Patterson in last March, and about 100 members joined at the time. It was then resolved to hold meetings on the 3d Monday of every month. The meeting for April was held in the Protestant Methodist Church. The committee of the society who belong to six different churches, applied to the trustees of the Free church, for permission to hold their May meeting in their house of worship, which was granted. The society met accordingly at that place on Monday evening of last week. A gentleman present by invitation while addressing the audience was interrupted by the beating of a drum which was followed by a discharge of stones.

The meeting adjourned s[illegible], after which the mob went very [illegible]rously to work, destroying the windows, d[illegible] lamps, &c. This was continued about half [illegible] when one of the proprietors of the build[illegible] through them to desist, which they [illegible] that city alone.

It is a curious fact, that [illegible], the west of the bank, has been, and i[illegible] run with shinplasters than any place i[illegible]. Since the suspension by the banks, [illegible],000, in shinplasters under one dollar [illegible]ued in Emigration to the West still [illegible]. The receipts on the rail road [illegible]troit and Ypsilanti average over $2[illegible]

Anarchy, disorder, riot and mobbism reigned in Philadelphia to the entire prostration of law, for several days succeeding the destruction of Pennsylvania Hall. The city on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and up to Sabbath evening, was delivered over to the tender mercies of an infuriated mob, trampling under foot all order and and acting their pleasure, in all respects.

On Friday evening, an Orphan's Asylum, just finished for destitute colored children, conducted by Friends, was set on fire by the mob, but it was luckily extinguished before entirely consumed. This was a most praiseworthy institution, and in no way connected with abolition. The feelings of the community there are inexpressibly indignant at this outrage.

On Saturday evening, the mob commenced an attack upon an African church in Sixth street, but were dispersed by the police before much injury was effected.

On Sabbath evening, a disturbance before the same church was quelled, The blacks were found armed, and several pistols were fired. A watchman was considerably wounded, but by the vigilance of the city officers, the blacks were disarmed, and the whites dispersed.

We will give here a short extract from a special charge to the Grand Jury, on account of this riot, by Judge Todd, an able officer and sound jurist:

"Gentlemen of the Grand Jury:

"A transaction has taken place in our city that has not only degraded and lowered it, but has given conclusive demonstration that the laws, unless vindicated, are no longer adequate to the protection of the citizen. Our property, our reputation, our liberties and our lives, are no longer secure.

"We are, it would seem, at the mercy of a mob. That city which has been the pride of my heart as that country, which, on account of its institutions and laws, I have almost idolized, have by the doings of the last twenty four hours, had their fair fame tarnished. Our institutions and our laws have been trampled upon and contemned.

The Mayor of Philadelphia has issued a proclamation offering a reward of $2000 for the apprehension and conviction of the rioters.

Governor Ritner has also issued his proclamation, one which does him honor. He announces his "regret that the soil of Pennsylvania has been disgraced, the rights of her peaceable citizens outraged, and their property destroyed by acts of lawless riot." He offers a reward of $500 for the apprehension of each and every person engaged in burning the Pennsylvania Hall, or in setting fire to the Orphan Asylum.

A part of the preamble of his proclamation is as follows:

The touch of the incendiary has been applied by unmasked violaters of law, in the darkness of night, in the heart of a crowded city, and for the avowed purpose of preventing the exercise of the constitutional and invaluable right of the free communication of thoughts and opinions.'—And whereas, if it be true that even error of opinion may be tolerated while reason is left free to combat it," the practice of combatting supposed error with the firebrand, or of punishing even crime without the established process of law, must be the very essence of tyranny. And whereas, it is the duty of the magistrate to protect all in the exercise of their constitutional rights without respect to the question whether their respective objects be or be not agreeable to himself or others, so long as their department is peaceful and the object lawful.

And whereas, it is the duty of the Governor of this Commonwealth, to take care that the laws be faithfully executed, especially in cases where enormity transcends the magnitude of common guilt.

The Two General Assemblies, at Philadelphia, appear to be each proceeding very quietly. The exscinded portion, have adopted the usual rules for the government of the Assembly, and proceeds in all respects as being the true General Assembly. This Assembly on Friday, rescinded the resolution adopted last year, discountenancing the operations of the American Home Missionary and Education Societies.

The other Assembly have appointed a committee to report a plan for the pacification of the church, so as to preserve, as far as practicable, its present entire organization, in its geographical extent.

The Constitutional Assembly have also adopted a resolution declaring the acts of the late assembly exscinding portions of the church, inoperative and void.

We have nothing new from Virginia. The vote on joint ballot will be a tie, or very near it.

Shinplasters.—Public meetings have been held in Trenton and Salem to discountenance the use of small change tickets. At Trenton it was resolved that the merchants be recommended to pay out no tickets under the denomination of one dollar after this date, (22d inst.) It was also resolved, among other resolutions, that after June 10th, they would neither receive or pay out tickets of any denomination.

The people in general are opposed to this kind of currency, be it whig or Jackson, and none are so rash as to take it in this region, unless he intends to pass it away in fifteen minutes. It will not do to sleep on.

We are gratified to perceive that the Administration have taken up the cause of the oppressed Cherokees in good earnest. The terms now offered them are such as every philanthropist can not but approve. They will probably be acceded to by Congress, though violently opposed by the Georgia delegation,—and they will probably be accepted by the Cherokee nation. The terms propose that they shall be allowed two years to emigrate—the expenses of removal to be defrayed by the United States—an additional sum to be paid for their improvements and lands this side of the Mississippi, and that their title to the land at the West, be perfect, and never without their consent to be inclosed into a Territory or State. The land to which they remove is very superior, both for agriculture and inland navigation.

We hope that in this way this difficult and vexed question will be settled, without injustice, war or bloodshed—notwithstanding the threats of Georgia that she will not permit the execution of the treaty to be delayed a week congress agreeing to it or not.

Revival in Hartford.—The number of persons admitted to the different churches in this city during the present revival, is nearly as follows, viz; In the South Congregational Church, by Profession, 112, by letter 14—in the free Church by profession and letter, 107—in the two Baptist Churches 125 in each—in the Methodist Church 170—in all 753. A large number have been admitted to the North Congregational Church, and there yet remains a large number of candidates for admission. In the Centre Church the admission of candidates for membership will take place on the first sunday of June next. We are informed that in the other Churches also, there yet remain candidates to be examined for admission.—Hartford Observer.

ALBANY, MAY 14.

Gen. JOHN E. WOOL, is in the city. This officer has been for some months in the discharge of delicate and responsible duties. He was ordered to the command of the Northern frontier at a period when our fellow citizens in this State and Vermont were not only warmly sympathizing with the Canadian Patriots, but strongly inclined to participate in their struggle. Gen. Wool repaired to the North at a moment when the belligerents were coming into collision. He was without troops, and had only the power of appealing to the reason and judgement of his fellow citizens. By his firmness and prudence, he succeeded in pacifying a highly excited community Not a hostile blow was struck, and nothing occurred upon our long line of Northern frontier to compromise or embarrass our relations with England. In this, as on former occasions, Gen. Wool rendered good service to his country.—Evening Journal.

BALTIMORE, MAY 18.

We learn from the Wheeling Times of Tuesday, that the corporate authorities of that city complied, on Saturday last, with the provisions of the late law of Virginia concerning the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad by subscribing one million of dollars towards its completion. The subscription is said to be in accordance with the stipulations previously agreed on by the Board of Directors of the Rail Road, and a delegation from city Council of Wheeling. The Times states that the act of subscription was sanctioned by the citizens in town meeting assembled for that purpose on Saturday afternoon, and now only wants the ratification of the stockholders of the Company, to close entirely the negotiation. and thence enable the Company to avail itself of all the means appropriated by the States of Virginia and Maryland, and the city of Baltimore, which exhibit an aggregate large enough to construct that work to the proposed termination on the Ohio.—Patriot.

The business in Cleaveland (Ohio) indicates great activity in trade. On the 15th inst. there were 37 arrivals from the Ohio Canal, and boats were coming in the next day as fast as it was possible for them to pass the locks into the river, all loaded with pork, flour, wheat, whiskey, bacon, lard, &c. A large number of schooners were taking in freight of the staples of Ohio, for Buffalo and New York, and eleven brigs and schooners entered from the lake on the same day. The following item is from the marine intelligence of the Herald of the 15th—

The brig Illinois, Capt. Bark, left the wharf of Messrs. Scott & Carter, this morning, with 772 bbls flour, 3000 bush. wheat, 9 bbls Pot Ashes, 30 bbls whiskey, 248 bbls pork, equal to 220 tons drawing 10 feet.

The Tallahassee Floridian of May 5th, gives an account of an attack made by a British cruizer, upon the ship Oconee, bound to St. Marks from Liverpool. When near the Double Headed Shot Keys, the Oconee was chased and repeatedly fired into by Her B. M. brig Wanderer. Capt. Bushby. At length, after the Oconee rounded to, she received two shot across her deck, followed by two volleys of musketry in quick succession, and was then boarded by the lieutenant of the vessel. After various inquiries as to her owners cargo &c., &c. the lieutenant left the Oconee, with orders that she lie under his stern until a signal was given to make sail; but it being now in night, the Oconee under cover of darkness resumed her course. The cannonading of the ship commenced at 7 P. M. The statement of this outrage was furnished by W. L. Lyon, captain of the ship. But there may be another side to the story; of late years British cruizers have not been in the habit of wantonly attacking American vessels.

The Western Banks.—The Cincinnati Gazette of Friday last, says; "We understand, that at a Convention of the Indiana Banks, it was resolved to correspond with those of Ohio and Kentucky, in reference to an early resumption. It is thought the Western banks may resume, at an early day, without waiting for those of the Atlantic or the South."

Congress.—On Thursday, the most important thing done was the passage of the Cumberland road bill, providing for its continuance through into Missouri. It is now a law.

The Senate took up the Navy Appropriation bill; and the house progressed in the Cherokee Affairs.

All the Detroit banks resumed specie payments in full, on the 16th inst.

The United States bank has lately received eleven hundred thousand dollars in specie from the West.

We understand that the last Sabbath was desecrated in the midst of our moral community, by the training of horses at the Camden course. Of course, rum and all its concomitants were there. Comment is unnecessary.—Camden Mail.

Steerage passengers from Europe are increasing again. There arrived at New York on Friday last in three different packets, from Liverpool, Hull and Havre, 462.

Young Women.—There is nearly always something of natures own gentility in very young women (except indeed when they get together and fall a giggling) it shames us men to see how much sooner they are polished into conventional shape, than our rough masculine angles. A vulgar boy requires great assiduity to move three steps—I do not say like a gentleman, but like a beast that has a soul in it; but give the least advantage of society or tuition to a peasant girl, and a hundred to one but she will glide into refinement, before the boy can make a bow without upsetting the table. There is a sentiment in all women, ans sentiment gives delicacy to thought, and fact to manner. But sentiment with men is generally acquired, al offspring of the intellectual quality, not, as with the other sex, of the moral.—Earnest Maltravers.

BRITISH QUEEN.—The agents of the British and American Steam Navigation Company state that the splendid steam ship British Queen was to be launched on the 12th inst. She will be coppered and nearly ready for sea when launched; after which, she will proceed to Glasgow to take in her machinery, and it is expected that she will leave England in August for New York. This ship is about 500 tons larger than the Great Western.

Detroit is adopting Wooden pavements—proposals being advertised by the city for paving the principal streets with hexagular blocks, 9 inches in diameter and one foot long.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" " Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
College and Law Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

ALLEN WILSON, Secretary
of the Board of Trustees.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. JAMES, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee :—Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Janks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited in a far more satisfactory, lively and edifying manner, than in the latter and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private use, and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and scenery.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—'Its well worthy a place in every family library.'

Dr. Alexander says—'The Theological Sudent will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to the knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect. And, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indigestion, and can not produce any other than a salutary effect in any.—Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to purify the blood—to assist the digestive operation in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalize circulation—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various unctions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at this Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York.

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is peculiar need, that institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservators of our free institutions. Patriotism as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

PROSPECTUS OF THE New York Mirror.

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly esteemed Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts: embellished with magnificent and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood —and new, original and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and containing articles from the pens of well known and distinguished writers, upon every subject which can prove interesting to the general reader; including original poetry—tales and essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice, and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the second drama as it may announce itself—selections from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors in literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. The best writers in the land will contribute to its pages, and a spirited and liberal patronage will be maintained. The sum of $5000 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume.† Besides which, choice translation from the French, German, Italian and Spanish: and Selections from popular journals abroad will serve give it variety, and render it one of the most piquan fascinating and exquisite repositories of elegant literature that the age has extant.

†In Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the arrangements entered into and consummated for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second day of July next, are in the pledge that in every respect, but particularly in the literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its pre-eminent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most vaunted popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on beautiful paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for a less term than one year.

Somerset Orphans' Court,
Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of James Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be forever barred of his or her action against the said administrators.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the said administrators give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within one year from this time by setting up such notice in five of the most public public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefor against the said administrators.

THADEUS DAVID'S

WRITING FLUID,

A Substitute for Ink, for the Steel or Quill Pen.

THE superiority of this Fluid over common Inks, may be summed up under the following heads: The ease with which it flows from and follows the pen, the superior blackness which it exhibits on parchment, the clearness with which it writes, its bright and distinct color when first written, also its drying so quickly, retaining its fluidity in all weathers, having no tendency to become ropy or muddy, never having any sediment; and lastly, its great Durability, and its quality to resist the agents used to obliterate the common inks, rendering it particularly valuable for writing Deeds, Notes, Wills, Checks, and also Log books as it cannot be impaired by Sea air.

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals, and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Journal of the American Institute.

Iron Vessels.—The foreign papers abound with accounts of the new and various uses to which iron is applied. Among certain papers politely furnished the delegation of the Institute by Capt. Roberts, of the Sirius, was a list of iron Steam boats built by a single establishment, contained in a table. The same paper contains a great number of letters and extracts of letters from different individuals. The high standing of many of these gentlemen, entitles their statements to the highest respect. They all bear testimony to the superiority of this material for this purpose. The letter in relation to the Steam boat John Randolph, from G. B. Lamar, Esq., of Savannah, we shall insert.

Iron vessels are beginning to be built in this country.

"Liverpool, 9th July, 1836.

"The iron steam-boat, which you constructed and sent out for me in pieces, to Savannah, Georgia, 1834, was received, and put up, and riveted complete within three months' time; and, though I was unaccustomed to such work had been sent at the same time to complete her, I found the expense of them quite unnecessary, as the pieces had been so well arranged and marked by you, that no difficulty could occur with persons at all conversant with the ordinary construction of boats or vessels; besides which, a larger one, since sent to the same place by you, for the Steam-Boat Company of Georgia, was put up in even less time, and without any difficulty. In mine, which was called the "John Randolph," was placed an English engine of thirty inches cylinder and five feet stroke, with heavy iron boiler, steam, and other pipes, with which, and water and wood for twelve hours, (six cords) she drew but two feet nine inches water. She made her first trip in August, 1834, towing flats with cargoes, on Savannah river, the current of which is two and a half miles per hour, and with the weight of 3,000 bushels of salt (about 200 tons) up, or 1, 500 bales of cotton (about 220 tons) down, on the two flats, she made, with eighteen revolutions of the crank per minute, five miles per hour upward, and upwards of eight miles per hour down the stream.

"She was kept in constant employment from August 1834, till April 1835, when her hull was examined inside and out, and was found to be uninjured. From July, she was again constantly employed till April, 1836, when she was again examined, and found free from rust or injury, though from July to December the river had been very low, and she had been once aground for a week on a sand bar, and daily, while running, on and over logs, snags, and other innumerable impediments, as well as the sand bars, during that time working the flats off and over the bars, very frequently during which they were often snagged and otherwise made leaky, while the steam boat itself, though made to take the worst difficulties, when known to the pilots, was not injured, and remained as tight as at first.

"The means to prevent the iron rusting was only three coats of white lead inside, and three of red lead outside, previous to launching, and one coat of white lead inside, between August, 1834, and April 1835, and two coats of each, at that time, inside and out respectively, and one coat of white lead inside, between July, 1835, and April, 1836.

"In addition to the foregoing conclusive evidence in her favour, I may add, that the directors of the Steam Boat Company of Georgia, who had been eighteen years engaged in the navigation of that river, and had tried various projects for its improvement, so soon as they observed the condition of the "Randolph," in April, 1835, when she was first examined, immediately resolved to order the one you sent out for that company in the month of February last.

"Not willing to trespass the already tedious length of this letter, I will take leave to add, as my own opinion, and from the experience of the John Randolph, that iron boats are decidedly superior, in every respect, to wooden: and for lightness, durability, impregnability to snags, or other injury, or the extent of injury to be apprehended, even after such accidents occur, whether to the boat or cargo superior to any that have yet been tried, and must, in the course of time, from these considerations alone, (besides combining every advantage that others do,) entirely supersede all other vessels, whether for river or sea service, should the difficulties apprehended in regard to the compass be overcome; and I will also add that such is, I believe, the universal opinion of all who have witnessed the operations of the 'John Randolph.' &c." "G. B. LAMAR."

The Mob in Philadelphia, which destroyed the Abolition Hall in that city, was caused, it is said, by the fact, that black men and white women were seen reading the streets arm in arm; and setting check by jowl in the Hall of "free discussion." The cause is one certainly well calculated to excite the indignation of a community; but it does not justify the result. Mob law, to effect moral or religious ends, cannot, in our opinion, be justified by any combination of circumstances. It will almost invariably when resorted to lead to evil greater than that sought to be remedied.—Richmond Whig.

Last Sunday the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors went into effect. We saw during the day and evening—what we have not seen before on a Sunday for five years past—three men so drunk that their power of locomotion was almost extinct. These fellows had, probably, stowed away the article by the jug full the day previous. It is a difficult thing to mend a fence so that a hog cannot find or make a hole large enough to crawl through.—Boston Times.

Sensible Courting and Marrying.—When a woman of sense—let her have beauty too, (and she will, of some sort, if she be sensible and amiable) gives her heart to a man of established character, who perhaps has "sighed like a furnace and got over his fever, and been out in the world to struggle for his place and his reputation; one who has kept his feelings for woman pure by his chastenesss, and not mingling too much with them, there is a romance acted; but it is all inside, in the heart. The arrangements for the wedding are made without flutter, and our gentleman, about the right time, walks with composed and dignified steps towards the house of his betrothed, rejoicing like a strong man to run a race. There is no giggling to hide tears, but some honest laughter; there is no melancholy faces, for it is a contract reason approves. There is something natural about it. He takes his wife like a man who walks by day-light. There is no glorious uncertainties here; This is no love in a cottage business. The romance, the delight, we feel in such is, that a man has had the force of character to work his way to deserve the respect of a sensible woman and to put himself in a situation to repay the affection; that he has subdued his passion to his reason: that he is the oak around which woman, the ivy, may bind its caressing tendrils, and be lifted by it into sunshine. How can you associate that beautiful idea of Irving's with one of the very romantic, dapper little matches of the season? Year goes on after year; still husband and wife are always together, an union of heart and mind. Now it is, that the world wonders; now they are called 'the romantic couple'—'love each other so'—'nothing like it.'—Knickerbocker.

The Sublime and the Ridiculous.—The answer of the Indian chief has often been admired, who, at one of the councils held with the agents of the United States, on being invited to take a chair, replied proudly, "The earth is my mother: I will repose on her bosom." A good thing has been going the rounds of the newspapers, representing the characteristic reply of a western squatter to an inquiry with regard to his place of abode. If it was not for the homeliness of the language, it would exceed in sublimity the celebrated reply of the savage chieftain. It shows how narrow is the line which divides the sublime from the ridiculous—for, in this case, the effect arises from the irresistible confounding of the two. The sentiment is really lofty, while the manner in which it is conveyed cannot fail to provoke a smile. "Mister, where is your house?" asked a curious traveller of a half-horse half-alligator squatter. "House, eh! do you think that I'm one of them sort? Stranger! I sleeps on the government purchase—I eats raw bear and buffalo, and drinks out of the Missiesippi."—Mirror.

Force of Royal Example.—An English paper mentions that equestrian exercises are now all the rage among the young ladies of that country, in consequence of the queen's partiality for riding horseback. It is suggested that if Victoria would only set the example of smoking a cigar, she would make the fortunes of all the tobacconists in the kingdom.—Ib.

Two gentlemen the other day, at a public table, got into a vehement dispute upon a subject on which it was quite evident both were profoundly ignorant. A big bull dog, which had been quietly sleeping on the hearth, became roused by their violence, and began barking furiously. An old gentleman who had been quietly sipping his wine while the disputants were talking, gave the dog a kick and exclaimed, "Hold your tongue, you brute. You know no more about it than they do." The laugh of the whole table was turned upon the noisy brawlers.—Ib.

Be substantially great in thyself, and more than thou appearest unto others—and let the world be deceived in thee as they are in the lights of heaven.—Ib.

Manners.—I make it a point of morality never to find fault with another for his manners. They may be awkward or graceful, blunt or polite, polished or rustic, I care not what they are, if the man means well and acts from honest intentions without eccentricity or affectation. All men have not the advantage of good society, as it is called, to school them in all its fantastic rules of politeness; and if there is any standard of manners, it is founded in reason and good sense, and not upon those artificial regulations. Manners, like conversation, should be extemporaneous and not studied. I always suspect a man who meets me with the same perpetual smile on his face, the same congeeing of the body, and the same premeditated shape of the hand. Give me the hearty—it may be rough—grip of the hand, the careless nod of recognition and when occasion requires, the homely but welcome salutation, How are you my friend?

A sportsman near Cincinnati recently fired a charge of shot at a woman by mistake; whereupon the News of that city advises those who do not know a human being from a board-fence to stay within the corporation limits.

It is better to know things, than to have a mere notion about many things.

Fair Prospects of Massachusetts and Tennessee.—These two states have now, by the free voice of the people, banished from their borders the entire retail of spirituous liquors except by the apothecary as a common medicine. This has been done, not by any political party, or sectarian bigotry, but by men of all parties, and all sects; not by a small majority, but by a large one; and, in the former state, by the voice of more than two-thirds of her senators and representatives, in general court assembled. In both states it has been done on the ground that the article is neither needful nor useful, and that the traffic brings upon the community an amount of pauperism, crime and wretchedness not to be borne. There is no reason to suppose, therefore, that it will ever be restored, but that, henceforth, these states will move onward without a license or a dram-shop; and so far as the laws are executed, without the ordinary sale, in any place, of ardent spirits as a beverage. Let us glance at a few of the probable results.

1. A drunkard will hereafter in those states be a rare spectacle.

2. Most of the present race of drunkards will be reformed; such as continue so on wine, beer and cider, and by getting ardent spirits from unprincipled apothecaries and physicians, as a medicine: but the most will remove to other states.

3. The taverns and public houses will assume a new aspect, be neat and comfortable accommodations for travellers, more like private than public houses; no drunkards hanging around them; no filthy bar-rooms filled with an obscene profane rabble: no bloated, swaggering barkeeper for a host; no noise at midnight disturbing repose.

4. In the seaports of the one, and the river towns of the other, there will be no landsharks to catch the poor sailor and boatman. Sailors' boarding-houses and lodging places will be places of safety, from which the poor seamen may go out untarnished, with all that is his, to his own dear home, or to his path on the mighty waters.

5. With the destruction of dram-selling, in ports and harbors, will, in a great measure, cease gambling, debauchery, fighting, robbery, manslaughter, and the like.

6. More than three-fourths of the crimes and pauperism may cease; and more than three-fourths of the taxation occasioned by these evils be, in future, dispensed with.

7. The frequency of diseases may be greatly lessened, and future epidemics, like the cholera, may be expected to be far less destructive.

8. The number of insane will be much less than in former years. No wives will be whipped and murdered, and no children bruised and maimed by husbands and fathers, made fiends by rum.

9. Locomotives, stages, steamboats, ships, and all kinds of violent machinery, may be managed with a steadiness and caution that will secure safety to travellers, owners, and all engaged in and about them.

10. The rising generation will come up healthful and vigorous, without bodily, mental, or moral deterioration, from strong drink.

11. The war spirit will subside, and military days will be comparatively harmless to the community; while, by the prevalence of Temperance, the public arm will be mightily strengthened.

12. Education will be far more widely diffused. In no town will there be, as formerly, ten or a dozen families made too poor, by the tavern and the dram shop, to clothe their children, and send them to school.

13. The elective franchise will be preserved in great purity. Men will vote with clear heads and sound hearts for those who are to rule over them. while the political demagogue, stripped of his most potent error, will sink in contempt.

14. Public morals will every where be improved; the efficiency of the gospel be augmented; the house of God increasingly honored; and multitudes of souls who, had the sale of spirituous liquors not been suppressed, might have travelled through woes unutterable to the drunkard's grave, may now be trained and prepared for the endless joys of heaven.

Are such delightful prospects of Massachusetts and Tennessee, what state in the east or west will be slow to follow her example.

From the Gambier Observer.

A Sabbath Scholar in an Infidel Family.—When on my way to this state, some seven years ago I witnessed in the city of ——, New York, the baptism of two elderly persons, a gentleman and his lady, who had grown grey in infidelity, and who ascribed their conversion to the following interesting circumstance:—

It ought perhaps to be remarked, that the gentleman had been among the most respectable lawyers in that part of the state, and had retired from the profession on a very independant property. He had all his life been a sceptic, and had to some extent persecuted the church.

As he was sitting in his parlor one day, perusing a newspaper, he observed his grand or adopted child, a sunday school scholar, and only seven years of age, clasp her hand as she walked across the room and prayed with great earnestness "God be merciful to me a sinner, create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me." Can the child be conscious of sin, said he to himself, and he called her to him and inquired of her why she prayed so? "Because pa, my heart tells me so." The interesting incident indicated a new train of thought. He was led to view man as a sinner, and to see that with which ...ven notice innocence might look for a reward of virtue at the hands of God, guilt could not; and that, therefore, if man is not saved by a Saviour, he must inevitably be lost. The delightful consequence was, that he was ultimately converted and made the happy instrument of the conversion of his lady, whom he had in the days of his scepticism made an infidel. The child belonged to a Sunday school that was favored with the constant prayer of the church with which it was connected; and shall we not pray for our Sunday schools.

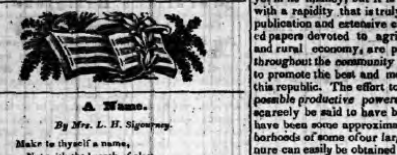
POETICAL.



A Name.

By Mrs. L. H. Sigourney.

Make to thyself a name,
Not with the breath of clay,
Which like the hollow, broken reed,
Doth hide itself away:
Not with the fame that vaunts
The tyrant on his throne,
And hurls his stigma on the soul
That God vouchsafes to own.

Make to thyself a name,
Not such as wealth can weave,
Whose warp is but a thread of gold
That dazzles to deceive;
Not with the tints of love
From out its letters fair;
That scroll within thy hands shall fade,
Like him who placed it there.

Make to thyself a name,
Not in the sculptured aisle;
The marble oft betrays its trust,
Like Egypt's lofty pile;
But ask of him who quelled
Of death the victor strife,
To write it on the blood-bought page,
Of everlasting life.

Wreck of the Steamboat Home.

BY MRS. E. C. STEDMAN.

She stood by the shores of the North in her pride,
That beautiful steamer, the pride of the brave!
And offered the seaboard a "home," on the tide,
That should lead to one dearer beyond the dark wave,
Full many were lured by her promising men,
And yielded the treasures of life to her care:
While soon like a cloud in the distance was seen
The land where awakened hopes fleeting as fair.

No vessel that rides o'er the perilous sea
Goes forth richer laden with wealth of the mind,
And yet none seemed bolder to venture than she,
Nor feared less the danger of ocean and wind.
As swift as the sea-bird doth cut through the air,
She ploughed the deep waters a day and a night;
While all did a smile of prosperity wear,
And hope hovered o'er with her pinions of light.

* * * * * *

But alas for the hopes which are based on the sea!
Like names in the sand which its billows efface,
They fade in a moment, and, bright though they be,
The ocean leaves not of their beauty a trace.
Night closed again over them—and morning arose—
The smile had departed, the heavens did frown;
The roar of the elements broke their repose,
And to surge after surge did the vessel bow down.

Oh, Ocean! 'tis thou that dost speak of that Power
Who walked on thy billows and said 'Peace! be still!'
'Tis when thy proud waves in their loftiness tower,
Aroused at His bidding and stayed at His will,
That the glory of man is brought down to the dust,
And he feels that 'tis sinful to have Him his foe;
But oh, if a Friend, it is then that his trust
Doth the fullness and worth of its blessedness know!

A shout through a pause in the tempest is heard—
"A leak! and all hands to the pump, or we sink!"
'Twas the knell of their hopes—and yet each at the word,
Took hold with a firmness that deigned not to shrink!
The sails are unfurled, and she steers for the shore,
Alas! but to hasten destruction and death!
And now do the lips of the perishing pour
A prayer to the God of the storm with each breath.

The sun sets once more 'neath a curtain of cloud,
And darkness, thick darkness, encircles them all;
The tempest is sounding yet loud and more loud,
And Death seems awaiting to spread o'er his pall.
The wife clings to him who hath been all her trust,
And wildly despairing the grasp is returned;
The mother embraces the babe fondly nursed,
And looks to the rock whose defence she hath learned

But 'mid the deep groans and the vain cries for aid,
The Christian doth tranquilly gaze on the scene,
For his trust on the God of the ocean is stayed,
And Heaven awaits him, though death lies betwe en
Him strikes—the frail steamer!—and parts with the blow!
That crash and those shrieks drown the winds and the waves!
But the scene! ah, no pencil its horrors may show,
As fast they go down to the deep ocean caves!

The wave parts asunder the husband and wife—
Ascribed farewell, and the struggle is o'er;
The babe is washed off in the billowy strife,
And the mother screams, follows, and rises no m ore!
One resource is still left—'tis the frail t iny boat—
Yet madly they crowd it, and launch on the wave—
A plunge! and a shriek of despair's wildest note,
And but one lives to tell of their watery grave!

But many cling yet to that proud steamer's wreck,
Whose fragments, alas! soon are scattered afar;
And on white-crested waves, through the gloom, like a speck,
Is seen the poor sufferer, lashed to a spar!
And now he seems buried beneath the white surge,
Then rises on mountains and rides o'er its breast,
Again he sinks down, and again doth emerge,
Till, wearied and gasping, he gains the shore's rest.

More breaks on the scene, and the tempest is stilled,
Dead bodies are strewing the desolate strand;
While few are the saved, who, exhausted and chilled,
Are cast on a drenky and moneiless land.
But the steamer—ah, where is she now in her pride?
Her requiem dies on the breath of the gale,
And notes of deep sadness respond o'er the tide,
As oft is repeated the heart-rending tale.

HUSBANDRY.

From the Farmers' Cabinet.

The cultivation of the soil, in our country, is yet in its infancy, but it is growing into manhood with a rapidity that is truly surprising, and the publication and extensive circulation of well edited papers devoted to agriculture, horticulture, and rural economy, are producing an influence throughout the community which, bids fair greatly to promote the best and most durable interests of this republic. The effort to ascertain the greatest possible productive powers of the soil, can yet scarcely be said to have been made; still there have been some approximations to it in the neighborhoods of some of our large cities, where manure can easily be obtained and the productions of the soil are readily disposed of at fair prices A very worthy and industrious individual, who resided within a few miles of Philadelphia, and who still carries on his business of horticulture and farmer with much zeal and energy, married upwards of forty years ago, and took on a lease for seven years about thirty acres of heavy, flat, clayey land, with the necessary buildings. The soil was thin, and his capital consisted principally in the joint industry of himself and his companion she was much discouraged at their prospects on settling on their new location, but they were both of the short backed, industrious, economical stock, of German origin, and set to with cheerfulness and vigor; their neighbors were of the same class in life, and generally tenants of from 20 to 40 acres under city landlords. Their plan was to raise as many vegetables and as much fruit as they could dispose of advantageously in the market, and appropriate the remainder of the land to the cultivation of the various kinds of grain and grass to supply their domestic wants, and if there was any overplus, to dispose of it in the manner to add to the general fund.

After proceeding on for some time in this way, he ascertained, that by great industry, economy, and close attention in business, he, in common with his thrifty neighbors, could each, after paying the rent, save about two hundred dollars per annum. His neighbors being of the penny saving class of society, put their monies out at interest, at six per cent. per annum; but, my friend George, who was a little more penetrating into what he thought would promote his interest informed the writer of this, that he bought manure with his money, and it produced him sixty per cent. In this way he proceeded till his lease terminated, when he purchased the place and became a landed proprietor. He still prosecuted his business with energy, annually improving the soil by the copious application of additional doses of manure, principally purchased and hauled from the city; and still his annual receipts continued to grow as he encouraged the soil to grow more and more produce, by continually supplying it with plenty of nutriment of a suitable kind. As his means increased, his family increased, for his wife was a fruitful vine in every sense of the word. They had ten children, whom they brought up and educated well, and those of them with whom I am acquainted, do honor to their parents, being real chips of the old block, finally exhibiting the great advantages of good rearing in habits of industry and economy, which might well be envied by many of our respectable citizens, whose sons and daughters have been taught in a very different school. A number of the adjacent little farms were from time to time purchased by my friend, (a small portion of whose history I am writing out for you, without his knowledge or consent, though the materials I obtained from himself, at different times,) all of which were duly paid for, and he is now the owner of a large tract of land, though it is divided into small farms or vegetable lots. Several years ago, he removed to an adjacent farm, and put one of his sons on his first purchase of thirty acres, under a contract that he should first pay for all the hired labor, and manure bought for the farm, out of the gross receipts for the produce, and then divide the balance into two equal parts and pay over to his father one half, and keep the other moiety himself; and the amount thus paid over annually has been, for many years past, thirteen hundred dollars; of course the next proceeds of these thirty acres annually is twenty six hundred dollars: after supporting the family of the son in eatables and paying for the hired help and the manure applied to the land. This statement may appear to some as too extraordinary to be true, but there is no fiction or exaggeration about the concern whatever, and in fact the half has not yet been told, as the reader would at once perceive, if he should visit the spot, particularly in strawberry time, which will soon arrive after this communication emanates from the press. He will there see as many strawberries as will sell for $600; cabbages, limabeans, early potatoes, asparagus and tomatoes growing close to, and resting on the fences, and in fact every other kind of fruit and vegetable that is sold in the market, of the earliest growth and in the highest state of perfection. It is not easy to get a dinner at one of our best hotels, or on board any of our large steamboats, without paying tribute to my worthy friend, the gardener, who richly deserves all he gets, as a reward for his intelligence, his indefatigable industry, and his sound economy. But to conclude, he is now worth enough, after the toil of near fifty years, to purchase five of the best ships belonging to this port, all obtained without the taint of speculation of any kind, but by honest industry directed by sound intelligence; and all this has proceeded primarily from he and his wife both pulling at the same end of the rope, and by his being "kind to the soil."

Hints to Young People.—No. 8.

You may observe in some persons, a certain quality, of great value to them in their occupation, and of vast importance to any man who exposes to turn his life to much account, for either himself or others. The quality to which I refer is frequently denominated energy of character. This name is, perhaps, as good as any we can give the thing, since most persons know what it means.

You sometimes see very industrious, hard working men, who make no headway in the world, and who seem to be unable to acquire the means of living faster than they consume them. They do not squander their income, they seem to live prudently and even sparingly, but get nothing beforehand. They have not the energy of character that is needful to move them out of the narrower path of their occupation. They have but one string to their bow. Some men pursue their particular occupation with a sort of broad sweep, which gathers it from a wide field Their thoughts are active, and they watch opportunities, and seize favourable events, and stand always ready to reach out for every benefit that offers itself: taking care to calculate skilfully the advantages and disadvantages of every transaction, so as not to incur hazards and losses inconsistently or carelessly. Others will plod along the course of their business, and take, with a slow and languid grasp, the patronage which drip in upon them, as though they expected to live without action, by being acted upon by others.

Few men of energetic character are contented to pursue their business for life in a subordinate capacity, as journeymen, for instance, or in any station where they can have only daily or monthly wages, barely sufficient to support them.—Most persons of spirit and energy prefer to be established in business as soon as they can procure the means. They desire to manage for themselves. They have a striving, enterprising spirit that wants scope. And when it can have its way, it yields pleasure, from its exercise and pleasure from its results. Such men enjoy their pursuits. They need only good principles, a calm and contented disposition, and a pure conscience, to give them all the happiness this world could afford. These are the men to whom the community look for public benefits. They are known and honored. The world in a measure depends on them. They have opportunity of doing good on an enlarged scale, and may expect both in the present and the future a proportionate reward.

CHARLES CRAYON.

From the Friend.

Mental Superiority.—Much has been said of the comparative mental powers of man and woman; but it is a poor resort for discussion, a useless disturbance of the mind, to attempt to decide which is superior. Shall we condemn the oak because it has not fragrance, or the rose because it has not strength? Man and woman are not formed as rivals: their powers are different as are their employments, and they neither clash with nor oppose each other. Man excels in strength, as woman in gentleness: man is daring, woman enduring. Both are alike capable of the highest emotions of the mind; both especially adapted for their particular pursuits, and each possesses endowments, which the beneficent Creator has made in their kind.

There appears an indelicacy in drawing aside the veil of seclusion, which ages have so counted in casting around woman: from this, let us not endeavor to allure her, nor disturb the charm of feminine delicacy, upon which she relies for her associated. When that is engaged in the bustle and turmoil of the world, can desire to leave any part of the sad struggle to the woman? Who can point to any one of his pursuits which is so unmixed with base matter as really to be willing that his mother, sister, or wife, should leave her domestic duties to share it? The court, the senate, and the mart, were never intended for woman. Desire not to find in her a rival instead of a companion: even when she is a few solitary females should signalize themselves for qualities which are not feminine: think of them rather as retiring from the contest for superiority; think of them indeed as they are—too pure to fear the light, though too modest to dare it. E.

Murder of a Missionary Family.—The Southern Christian Advocate publishes the following letter, giving a moving description of a massacre *by the Florida Indians. The writer is Superin*tendent of the Alachua Mission on the Tallahassee District;

"Dear Brother Capers—I am ruined! While engaged in my labors in the Alachua mission, I received a letter bearing awful tidings. It informed me that the indians had murdered my family! I set out for home, hoping that it might not prove as bad as the letter stated; but O my God it is, if not even worse! My precious children, Lorick, Pierce and Elizabeth, were killed and burned in the house. My dear wife was shot stabbed, and stamped, seemingly to death, in the yard. But after the wretches went to pack up their plunder, she revived and crawled off from the scene of death, to suffer a thousand deaths during the dreadful night which she spent alone by the side of a pond bleeding at four bullet holes and more than half a dozen stabs—three deep gashes to the bone on her head and three stabs through the ribs, besides a number of smaller cuts and bruises. She is yet living—and O help me to pray that she may still live. My negroes lay dead all about the yard and woods, and my every thing else burned to ashes. Pray for me.

"My family was on a short visit to my father-in-law, for the purpose of having some supplies sent up from our plantation to our temporary residence in the mission, and during this brief period the awful catastrophe took place.

A Big Fish.—The Poughkeepsie Eagle mentions that on Saturday last a bass weighing sixty two and a half pounds was caught in the Hudson river opposite. This fish is seldom found to be larger than 15 pounds. The noble fellow was brought up in a shad net, and on Monday afternoon was served up in the proper style, by Capt. W. Skinner, of the Exchange House, to a large number of citizens.

Twenty-fifth Congress.

Friday, May 18.

In the Senate, a bill was reported for the occupation of the Oregon Territory by the U. S. and postponed till Monday.

The Navy Appropriation bill was passed.

Mr. Clay's currency resolution, rescinding the specie circular, was debated till adjournment.

In the House, the bill extending the District bank charters passed to a third reading.

Saturday, May 26th.

The Senate was wholly occupied with Mr. Clay's currency resolution. Messrs. Clay and Calhoun on their respective sides spoke much and eloquently. Rives and Niles also engaged in the debate.

That part of the resolution which requires the government to receive bank bills was stricken out on motion of Mr. Wright, 28 to 19.

The House was engaged on private bills. A great day's work in that line was done, between two and three hundred *bills for the relief of indi*viduals were ordered to a third reading, and were severally read a third time, passed, and sent to the Senate for concurrence. Half a dozen days of similar devotion to business, would go far towards clearing the docket, though it is unprecedently heavy.

Monday, May 29.

The Senate received about 300 private bills from the house which were referred.

Mr. Webster's amendment to Mr. Clay's currency resolution then came up. The amendment virtually repeals Gen. Jackson's specie circular, and reads as follows:

Resolved, That it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to make or to continue in force, any general order which shall create any difference between the different branches of the revenue, as to the money or medium of payment, in which debts or dues to the Government may be paid.

This resolution passed to a third reading, 34 to 10.

The Cherokee question occupied the house a good part of the day.

Tuesday, May 29

After some unimportant business Mr. Webster's amendment on the currency resolution came before the Senate; and, after much debate, it was read a third time and passed, 34 to 19.

In the house, the bill continuing the charter of the District banks was read a third time and passed, 130 to 46.

The North-Eastern boundary was debated some, and then laid on the table.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the Indian Appropriation bill, and continued its session until eleven o'clock in the evening, without coming to any decision.

Mr. Parris, the member elect from Maine, appeared and took his seat.

Wednesday, May 30.

The Senate was mostly engaged with private bills.

In the house, Mr. Boon moved to suspend the rules for one hour to take up the joint resolution, from the Senate, repealing the specie circular, which passed the Senate on Tuesday.

Agreed to, 112 to 34.

The joint resolution was then taken up and read twice, and was then ordered to a third reading, 151 to 27. It was then read a third time and passed, 154 to 29, and a message sent to the Senate informing them of the passage of their Joint resolution.

The house then went into committee of the whole on the Indian Appropriation bill, and continued until 8 o'clock, P. M. without taking the question. Adjourned.

A Western Widow.—One of the finest steamboats on the western waters is the Ellen Kirkman so named in compliment to a lady of Nashville, Tenn. She was built at New Albany, Ia., and is 250 tons burthen—propelled by 2 engines of immense power. The Nashville Whig speaking of this noble boat, says—

Ellen Kirkman is the name of a wealthy and highly respectable widow woman of this city, whose enterprize and success in business is only excelled by her intimate and extraordinary acquaintance with commercial affairs. 12 years ago Mrs. K. was left with the care of a large estate, since which she has erected on our public square a pile of magnificient stores, not exceeded by any in the city; and is still as active and shrewd in transacting the most accomplished merchant of the east at 40. Who then will pretend to say that Ellen Kirkman is undeserving the compliment paid by the captain and owners of the steamer.

Destructive Tornado at Baltimore.—The monumental city seems to be particularly unfortunate in floods and high winds. On Wednesday, a storm of wind and rain swept over it, which though only of brief duration, appears to have been most lasting and destructive in its ravages. It came up from the south west and passed in a north easterly direction, carrying away the roofs and gable ends of houses, the steeples of churches and every other prominent object that lay in it course. No lives appear to have been lost, but many narrow escapes are reported in the papers. The most remarkable was, that of a young gentleman who had been out for a ride, and took shelter with his house in a large shelter within a short distance within his own residence. He had not passed the door an instant, before the gable end wall fell with a crash. Had he been a second or two later, he must have perished. The storm does not appear to have raged as heavily on the water, for the shipping in the port escaped with very trifling damage.—N. Y. News Era.

Desertion of a Whole Company!—The "Queen's Own," a company stationed at New Market, Upper Canada, (belonging to this Regiment,) safely arrived in our harbor last night, nearly sick of the Queen's service.—They had to travel a *good many miles thro' the woods be*fore they could get an opportunity to cross the Lake, during which time they sold their guns to good radicals to obtain provisions.—Rochester Democrat.

For the Philadelphia Visitor.

Mr. Editor:

It is amusing to look through our newspapers and periodicals, to observe the signatures attached to sonnets, tales, essays, &c. All worlds seem to have been ransacked by these modest writers, to find names with which to appear in public. But of all the absurdities that are exhibited in this way, none can exceed that of affixing some great name of antiquity to light and trivial compositions. It would seem as if the "mighty dead," had risen from the grave, and were figuring again in the 19th century, in the character of poetasters, essayists, and penny-a-liners. Not one has been able to remain in quiet. Every poet, philosopher, and orator of antiquity is now a regular contributor to our public journals. When such men write we should naturally expect depth of thought, *strength of rea*soning, power and beauty of language. But no, the most shallow conceits, idle speculations, and vulgar personalities are invariably the ones having such signatures. There is nothing objectionable in the mere act of appearing in print over a fictitious name, or in selecting a signature from the worthies of other days, but certainly good taste and modesty should dictate to every one the impropriety of assuming a character that he is entirely unqualified to represent.

Bad taste is also sometimes seen in the use of a signature that turns the whole piece into burlesque, when no such thing was intended—as a metaphysical disquisition by Pindar—Stanza to a butterfly by Plato—Holy Living by Bacchus, &c.

You perhaps wonder what has produced this tirade, but whether you do or not I mean to tell you. When your paper was handed to me yesterday, I immediately skimmed over the pages, as is my custom, to see if we had any original communications this week. And first my gratified vision rested on the beautiful "Song" of E. C. S. While I read it my heart vibrated in sympathy with the fair songstress, and had there been any "concord of sweet sounds" within me, I verily believe I should have "set it to music," as well as Mr. Ives. Just below this I found another poem "for the Union," addressed to a mother on the death of a child." Something sad & tender, no doubt, thought I; so I lengthened my phiz, instanter—read the lines and found them really touching and beautiful,—heaved a deep sigh and wondered who wrote them. I looked again and saw that Plato was the soft and gentle author.

Ye Gods! what a reversion came over my feelings! Instead of dropping a tear as I had at first intended, I could not help joining in chorus with my friend who had given vent to a violent horse laugh at the announcement. Plato, the grim and sooty god of the infernal regions, whom the Greeks and Romans hated as all good Christians do evil,—inditing numbers descriptive of parental grief and calamity! *But I may be mistak*en, thought I. Perhaps my fancy has clothed his honor, the chief justice of Tartarus, with a character he does not deserve. Let's examine Lempriere.

Did so, and read among other things as follows —"Pluto, son of Saturn and Ops, inherited his father's kingdom with his brothers Jupiter and Neptune, and received as his lot the kingdom of hell. As the place of residence was obscure and gloomy, all the goddesses refused to marry him! He was a hard-hearted and inexhorable God, with a grim and dismal countenance! The dog Cerberus watched at his feet, the harpies hovered round him, and near him stood the Eumenides with their heads covered with snakes.

His honor has certainly changed his nature lately and become very refined and sentimental.

FROM FLORIDA.

Charleston, May, 21.

A letter to the editors, dated Black Creek, May 16, says: "An express arrived here day before yesterday, stating that Alligator, who had been sent out about a month since by Gen. Taylor, had returned with 317 Indians, men, women and children, and the impression is that there will be no more campaigning, as it is supposed that all the indians will come in through the course of the summer. The John Mc. Lean has just arrived here from Fort Mellon, which post is to be broken up; that at Volusia is already abandoned. The Mc Lean brings soldiers, horses, boats, &c. The Charleston is expected to day from the same place."

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, June 5, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man.
THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Schools,—Take Notice.

It will be perceived by the notices now up, that the School Committee of Westfield township have, agreeably to the late law, divided the township into ten districts. The boundaries of each are given immediately under the notice of the meetings in each district for the election of trustees which takes place on the 14th inst. at 8 o'clock in the afternoon, when we earnestly hope the business of every District will be punctually attended to.

The committee would respectfully recommend that every School District attend to the licensing of teachers; and that a true list of all the children between the ages of 5 and 16, be forwarded to the committee by the 3d of July, with the names of the parents and guardians attached, as we believe a neglect will deprive them of their apportionment of the school fund.

By request of the Committee,
DENNIS COLES, Chairman.

We are glad to be able to state that the Somerville and Elizabethtown Rail road is now progressing in right good earnest; and it is considered certain that it will be finished to this place, by the 1st of October. Last week about one hundred men were put to work on it in the neighborhood of Westfield, and more are daily arriving, with horses and carts. This road when it gets into operation will add much to the business and convenience of all the inhabitants of this place and vicinity, and all should encourage it. After it is completed to Plainfield, the inhabitants of Boundbrook and Somerville will probably take it to Somerville, and from thence it will be taken to the Delaware River.

We received last week the number of the N. York Mirror, published on the 19th ult. It is one of the best numbers we have seen. Its contents are entirely original, and it contains a beautiful view of the city from Staten Island.

We are indebted to the Anti-Slavery Society of New York, for two numbers of the A. S. Examiner, the first containing the thrilling "Narrative of James Williams;" and the other the tour of Messrs. Thome and Kimball in the British West India Islands. The latter is a book of 128 large octave pages, and conclusively shows that immediate Emancipation is the most profitable thing possible for the slave-holder, as well as of incalculable benefit to the slave. Any one wishing to read these books can borrow them at this office.

Congressional.—In the Senate on Thursday, memorials for a National bank were presented, and some other unimportant business transacted. The House was mainly engaged with the Indian Appropriation Bill.

We are happy to perceive that our Senator, Mr. Southard, is making money, most rapidly. As a member of Congress, he gets over $50 per week,—as president of the Morris Canal Bank, he gets from $115 to 120, per week; and by the business of his profession, he being an eminent lawyer, he receives much. He has lately been engaged in several important suits in Trenton. He illustrates the art of doing many things at once, to perfection, filling the stations, and performing the duties of three men, in three different places, at the same time. He must in this way bring a good deal of money into the state, and we hope do good, and at the same time enrich himself. It is by no means an uncommon thing for members of congress to engage in professional business, during the session, but John Quincy Adams would not do it.

Mr. Wall, we also observe has been at Trenton at the present sitting of the New Jersey court of Appeals, as well as Mr. Sout hard, and indeed engaged on the opposite side of the same cause. If this be considered reprehensible, where can we find the man to cast the first stone—we know of but very few, who would not do likewise, if they had the opportunity.

The Corporation of Newark have given orders to their Treasurer to redeem all their tickets, whenever presented, whether redeemable this year or next.

The papers every where have much to say against the late outrageous and disgraceful conduct of the Philadelphia mobs; and all seem to agree that such conduct only tends to increase the numbers of the Abolitionists. All the judges and civil authorities have taken a bold and right stand against this prostration of law, and mobocratic supremacy.

It will be seen by our news from Congress, that a resolution offered by Mr. Webster, abolishing all distinctions in the kind of moneys received for public dues, has passed both houses by large majorities. It has since received the signature of the President and is now the law. This virtually repeals the specie circulars, for which there is now no use, whatever might have been its benefits at the time of its issue. The effect of this new law, on the stock market was felt immediately and materially. On Friday, in New York, all kinds of stock, in large amounts were sold at an advance of about 4 per cent. Mr. N. Biddle has addressed a letter to Mr. Adams, stating that it was probable that all the banks in the U. S. would soon resume specie payments —and another to the Board of Trade in N. York stating that he will immediately establish a branch of his bank in Wall-street, agreeably to their request. The prospects for an immediate return to times of general prosperity are now very fair.

Four Days Later from England.—The Orpheus from Liverpool, and the Samson, from London, arrived at New York last Wednesday evening with papers the 2d of May. Lord Melbourne had announced in the House of Lords that the Coronation would be postponed to the 28th June

The Cotton Market was fair. American cotton had advanced to a quarter of a cent, and there had been a tolerable demand. The last two days 12,000 bales were sold at Liverpool, the supply on hand was estimated at 548,000 against 496 000 last year—of American 476,000 against 89,000. The average price 6 3-4.

Trade was dull in the manufacturing towns—plenty of goods, but little demand. A London paper says—

The last accounts of the American markets and the situation of money affairs there leave no reasonable grounds for anticipating anything but loss by shipments, the "dry goods" stores being already surcharged with stocks, and sales only to be effected at ruinous sacrifices. In this condition of affairs many of the spinners and manufacturers have begun to reduce the hours of labor in their manufactories so as not to increase stocks of goods already inconveniently heavy; yet notwithstanding this prices are giving way, and on each succeeding market day those whose necessities oblige them to make sales, are compelled to submit to further reduction in prices.

From the Hudson River Chronicle.

The Croton Works.—The works in this neighborhood are proceeding at a rapid rate. Parts of several sections are now completed, and the contractors are pushing them forward with a zeal and enterprize worthy of all praise. The workmen have become quiet, the Corkonians and Far Downs being fully satisfied that going to jail for breaking each other's heads is but sorry amusement.

The entire work will probably cost some millions of dollars more than was originally estimated but what consequence is there attached to a few millions of dollars, when we take into consideration the ultimate benefits that are to flow from it carrying as it will a river of the purest and most wholesome spring water into the bosom of a populous city; imparting health to its inhabitants, and adding to their comfort, convenience and security.

Latest from Philadelphia.—We learn verbally, that the friends of liberty in Philadelphia are in excellent spirits, that it is determined to rebuild the Pennsylvania Hall forthwith, on a still more magnificient scale, not waiting for the recovery of the money from the city, and that about $30,000 of the stock is already subscribed for the purpose. We saw a letter from one, not a resident here, who a fortnight ago wished to sell his stock in the former hall, because he had made such new arrangements in business that it would be inconvenience to him to have the money; but since the burning, he has altered his mind, and sent on $100 for more stock. The Pennsylvania Freeman of Thursday last has the following:

"The Work Going on.—The streets of our city for several nights have been the scene of tumult, outrage and personal insult. The houses of abolitionists have been threatened with destruction —and in one or two instances have been surrounded by the mob. Aged and excellent citizens of both sexes have been grossly insulted. Our peaceful and unoffending colored population have been assailed—none of their churches unharmed with missiles, and night, after night, evil men have exulted over the prostration of wholesome law.

"Those who were most active in setting fire to the Hall, we have been told were strangers in our city—ruffians probably from the land of slavery,—the dirk-wearing and brawling representatives of Southern Lynch clubs. In the base attack upon the Orphan Asylum, in Thirteenth street, Alderman McMichael states, that he saw no one engaged, whom he could recognize although he has been long a resident of that section of the city."

Philadelphia Money Market.—Bicknell's Reporter of Tuesday says—

"The money market is in a much better condition at the present moment than it was a few months since; and that safe and substantial stocks will rise several per cent. above the present prices, we cannot permit ourselves to doubt. The tone is decidedly better; confidence is reviving, and the banks feel under less restraint. Specie now commands little or no premium, and is gradually working its way into circulation. A month ago, and a fifty cent piece was as rare as a lark in January.—Now, however, although not a bundle, still thousands of dollars in silver, change hands from day to day, in ordinary transactions of life."

The Hon. Levi Woodbury Secretary of the U. S. Treasury, has been unanimously nominated by the Governor and Council of New Hampshire, as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of that State to supply, the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Judge Richardson.

From the Albany Argus of yesterday

FROM THE NORTHERN FRONTIER.

During Outrages.—An express from Watertown reached this city yesterday afternoon, bringing despatches to Gov. Marcy, from the district Attorney, Marshall &c., at that place; by which we regret to learn that a most extraordinary outrage was committed within the American waters early on Thursday morning. The British steamboat Sir Robert Peel, lying to about seven miles from French creek, on the river St. Lawrence, was forcibly seized by a body of armed men, supposed to be Canadian refugees, set on fire, and entirely consumed.

A Fire Engine Pump has been constructed in Baltimore, by which water was forced on Saturday, by 4 men, through 200 feet of hose, or more upon one of the largest 3 story houses, after which 300 feet more of hose were attached, and it forced the water through 500 feet of hose, or more upon the roof of a three story house; and it was supposed by the engineer of the Columbia Fire Engine, that it forced water as high as five stories.

A Modest Proposal.—The London Age in warlike mood, quietly recommends the Government to take possession of New York in retaliation for the aid given by the United States to the Canadian rebels!

A company of itinerants, known as the Ravel family, are returning to New York from a tour South, where they have been giving exhibitions with $50,000! After an engagement at Niblo's they return to Europe.

Starvation Point.—We find a curious legal occurrence stated in a late English paper, which is by no means creditable to the Island of Jersey, where it took place, or to the English government which allows such laws to exist in any part of the British dominions.—The Solicitor General made application to the judges of the Royal Court in Jersey, on behalf of Mr. Lebey, that Peter Le Cross, a prisoner suffering incarceration at a suit for debt, should be reduced to starvation point, by withholding food from him, in order to compel him to give up his property to the applicant! After hearing the defence, the Court granted the application! So the contumacious prisoner is to be starved into the surrender of his property.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee :—Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited, it is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several useful engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a "goodly pearl," which every devout man should seek to posses in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—Its well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

House and Job Painting.

THE Subscriber informs the inhabitants of Plainfield and its vicinity, that he will continue the PAINTING BUSINESS,

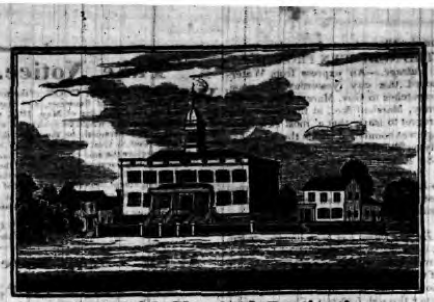
the present season, and is ready to do all kinds of House and Job Painting with neatness and dispatch.

☞ Sign and Ornamental Painting, and Paper Hanging, will also be attended to.

ELIAS KIRKPATRICK.



Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well suited to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Teachers.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, MRS. C. C. BRYANT, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield renders it one as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

ALLEN WILSON, Secretary
of the Board of Trustees.

PROSPECTUS OF THE New York Mirror.

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly esteemed Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts; embellished with magnificent and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood —and rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and original articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original poetry—tales and essays—humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors in literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. The best writers in the land will contribute to its pages, and a spirited foreign correspondence will be maintained. The sum of $600 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume! Besides which, choice translation from the French, German, Italian and Spanish; and Selections from popular journals abroad will serve to give it variety, and render it one of the most piquant fascinating and exquisite repositories of elegant literature and the fine arts extant.

Its Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the arrangements entered into and consummated for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second of July next, warrant the proprietor to hope that, in every respect, but particularly in the literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its pre-eminent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most vaunted popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on beautiful paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for a less term than one year.

Somerset Orphans' Court.

Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of Thomas Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be forever barred of his or her action against the said administrators.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the said administrators give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within one year from this time by setting up such notice in five of the most public public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefor against the said administrators.

P. VREDENBURG, Clerk.

State of New Jersey,
Middlesex County.

Orphan's Court, of the Term of March, 1838.

UPON the application of Simeon F. Randolph and Jonathan F. Randolph, Executors of Barzilla F. Randolph, deceased, to this Court to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased shall bring in their debts, demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be ever barred of his or her action against the said executors. It is ordered by the Court, That the said executors give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands, and claims against the said estate within twelve months from this time, by setting up such notice in five of the most public places in said county, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for the like space in one of the newspapers printed in this state, and if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim within the said period of twelve months after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be for ever barred of his or her action therefor against the said executors. ZABRISKIE, Clerk.

March 27, 1838. 62 3m

N. B. The executors of the above estate earnestly request all those indebted to the estate on book, to settle their accounts immediately,—and all those indebted by note, as soon as they become due; for the accounts must be closed as soon as possible.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they have not a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any case. Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach, bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretion—to purify the blood—to equalize and to rid action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at the Office where the Pills are for sale. 1 tf

WRITING FLUID,

A Substitute for Ink, for the Steel or Quill Pen.

THE superiority of this Fluid over common Inks, may be summed up under the following heads: The ease with which it flows from and follows the pen, the superior blackness which it acquires, the distinctness with which it writes, its bright and distinct color when first written, also its drying so quickly, retaining its fluidity in all weathers, having no tendency to become ropy or mouldy; never having any sediment; and lastly, its preservative qualities, and its quality to resist the agents used to obliterate the common inks, renders it particularly valuable for writing Bills of Exchange, Wills, Deeds, and also Log books as it cannot be imposed on by Sea air.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York.

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 300,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for good or evil. We believe its principles, if thoroughly embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful exertion to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Cincinnatti Chronicle.

The Hole in my Pocket.

It is now about a year since my wife said to me one day, 'Pray, Mr. Slackwater, have you that half dollar about you that I gave you this morning?' I felt in my waistcoat pocket, and turned my purse inside out, but it was all empty space (which is very different from specie) so I said to Mrs. Slackwater. 'I've lost it my dear, positively there must be a hole in my pocket.'

'I'll sew it up,' said she.

An hour or two after, I met Tom Stebbins. 'How did the ice-cream set,' said Tom. 'Set,' said I, 'like the sun, gloriously.' And as I spoke, it flashed upon me that my missing half dollar had paid for those ice-creams; however, I held my peace, for Mrs. Slackwater sometimes makes remarks—and, even when she assured me the next morning at breakfast that there was no hole in my pocket, what could I do but lift my brows and say 'Ah! is'nt there really.'

Before a week had gone by, my wife, like a dutiful helpmate as she is, always gave me her loose change to keep, called for a 25 cent piece, that had been deposited in my sub-treasury for safe keeping; there was a poor woman at the door, said she, that she'd promised it to for certain. 'Well, wait a minute,' I cried, 'so I pushed inquiries first in this direction, then in that, then in the other; but vacancy returned a horring groan.

'On my soul,' said I, 'thinking it best to show a bold front, 'you must keep my pockets in better repair, Mrs. Slackwater; this piece, with I know not how many more, is lost, because some corner or seam, in my plaguey pocket is still left open.'

'Are you sure?' said Mrs. Slackwater.

'Sure I say, that I am—it's gone totally gone.' My wife dismissed her promise, and then in her quiet way asked me to change my pantaloons before I went out, and to bar all argument laid another pair on my knees.

That evening allow me to remark gentlemen of the husband species, I was very loth to go home to tea; I had half a mind to bore some bachelor friend—and when Hunger and Habit—in their unassuming manner, one on each side—walked me up to my own door, the touch of the brass knob made my blood run cold. 'But do not think that Mrs. Slackwater is a Tartar, my friends, because I thus shrunk from home. The fact was that I had, while abroad, called to mind the fate of her twenty five cent piece, which I had invested, as larger amounts are often invested) in smoke—that is to say cigars; and I feared to think of her comments on my pantaloons pockets.

These things went on for some months; we were poor to begin with, and grew poorer, or, at any rate, no richer fast. 'Times grew worse and worse; my pockets leaked worse and worse; even my tailor's book was no longer to be trusted.—The rags slipped from it in a manner most incredible to relate;—as the Irish song says,

'And such was the fate of poor Paddy O'Moore
That his purse had the more rents, as he had the fewer.'

At length my wife came in with a subscription paper from the Orphan's Asylum; I looked at it sighed, and handed it back to her.

'Ned Bowen has put down ten dollars,' said she.

'He more shame to him,' I replied, 'he can't afford it; he can just scrape along any how, and in these times it ain't right for him to do it.' My wife smiled in her sad way, and took the paper back to him that brought it.

The next evening she asked me if I would go with her and see the Bowens, and as I had no objection, we started.

I knew that Ned Bowen did a small business that would give him about six hundred dollars a year, and I thought that it would be worth while to see what that sum would do in the way of house keeping. We were admitted by Ned, and welcomed by Ned's wife, a very neat little body of whom Mrs. Slackwater had told me a great deal, as they had been schoolmates. All was nice as wax, and yet as substantial as iron; comfort was written all over the room. The evening passed somehow or other, though we had no refreshment, an article which we never had at home but always want when elsewhere, and I returned to our own establishment with mingled pleasure and chagrin.

'What a pity,' said I to my wife that Bowen doesn't keep within his income.'

'I believe he does,' said she.

'But how can he on six hundred dollars,' was my answer, 'if he gives ten dollars to this charity, and five to that, and live so snug and comfortable too?'

'Shall I tell you?' asked Mrs. Slackwater.

'Certainly, if you can.'

'His wife' said she, finds it just as easy to go without twenty or thirty dollars worth of laces as to buy them. They have no fruit but what they raise and have given to them by their country friends, whom they repay by a thousand little acts of kindness. They use no beer; which is not essential to his health, as it is to yours; and then he buys no cigars, or ice-creams, or apples 100 per cent on market price, or oranges at 12 cents a piece, or candy, or new novels, or rare works that are still more rarely used; in short, my dear Mr Slackwater, he has no hole in his pocket.'

It was the first word of suspicion my wife had uttered on the subject; and it cut me to the quick Cut me? I should rather say it sewed me up, me and my pockets too; they have never been in holes since that evening.

Hard Times.—A passenger down stream informs us, 'pon honor, that at Cincinnati and Louisville the times are so hard, that a man will prop himself against a wall to hunt round his pockets for a quarter of an hour for a fourpence,—and not find it after all.

As an Irishman was leading a horse the other day, the animal broke from him and ran. Some passengers planted themselves in the road to stop him, which Paddy observing, and fearing they would frighten the horse, cried, "By the powers now, be aisy; if ye stop the baste, ye'll be only be making him run the faster!"

"John," said a careful father, "don't give cousin Simmon's horses too many oats—you know they have hay." "Yeth thur," said John, mowing towards the barn. "And, hark ye, John, don't give them too much hay, you know they have oats."

An old lady remarkable for her confused idea of the meaning of words, described a clear summer evening thus: "It was a beautiful bright night—the moon made every thing as light as a cork."

The Hod carrier and the Organ.—Dennis O'Toole spent twenty two years of his life in a rural retreat in old Ireland, and never heard the sound of any other musical instruments than the bagpipe, fiddle, fife, or drum; and when a fellow with a hand organ made his appearance, where Dennis was at work, he dropped his hod, and gazed with astonishment.—'Mort—mort—mort—mort'—was called from above till Dennis became enraged, and he sung out—"Blood an' nouns, cant ye wait awhile, till I hear the chap grind music out of a tay chest.—Boat Post.

Theatrical Puffs.—The folly of puffing actors and actresses, making them "the plus ultras" on every occasion, is finely hit off in the following criticism upon Miss Tree's acting in St. Louis. It is written by a Hoosier and comes much nearer to the truth than one half the senseless jargon that is met with almost every day in many of our papers. "I'll tell an almighty strange thing of how that gal (Ellen Tree) works the feelings of critters. When she was acting Julia in our parts the door keepers came away in, for it was tarnation cold; and no one took no notice of the doors, cos no more could get in; when an old bear snifled in his way into town, and finding no one astir, for they were all at the play, what does the critter do, but shifts his way there too, and crawls up behind the boxes. I guess he meant to sup off some of its chaps; but however, he listened, and listened, till he got quite affected, and so mollified, that he vowed he never would go mau eating any more—next night he went again, and brot his wife, and the thing was only discovered on the third night, that the critters were coming down to the box office with an alligator."

A very important case, one of a series, has lately been decided in the U. S. District Court, Judge Thompson presiding. It seems that in the Crown charter of Vermont, by which it was first dependent on New Hampshire, and afterwards on New York, a reservation was made of 500 acres of land in the northwest corner of every town, in trust for the use of the Episcopal church, for the propogation of the gospel in America. The revolution occurred, and the church, presuming that any claim would be useless, has slept upon its title. In the mean time, the lands were cleared and improved by squatters who sold out by quit-claim or bequeathed them to their children—until, finally they have become highly cultivated farms in the occupation of highly esteemed and valuable citizens; who conscious of the defect in their titles, imagined themselves secure from interference, since so many years had elapsed without disturbance. But about ten years ago the church was advised to make an effort for recovery, and commenced a suit, as a test. It was decided in favor of the church, and suits have been continually going on since, against all occupants of the church lands, by which many who have expended much in improvements have been made beggars, and a large amount of property is secured to the Episcopal church of the State.

Colored Guards.—It is reported that two regiments of negroes, 700 each, are to be raised in Canada and stationed on the Niagara river. The Baltimore Chronicle hopes the negroes of the Northern States will avail themselves of this fine opportunity to enter the service of her Majesty.

Taking a Soda Powder.—An individual who had never seen the process of mixing a soda powder performed, was ordered by his physician to drink soda water. A box of powder was accordingly obtained from the druggists, and the acid dissolved in one tumbler and soda in another, as per directions. With sundry contortions of the face the acid was taken, and the soda taken after it. The acid and the alkali meeting in that confined region, and finding it too small for their lively operations, boiled over, as a matter of course. The poor fellow thought it was his day of doom, when he felt the pother within him, and found the froth spouting from his mouth and nose like steam from a safety valve. The next time he took a soda powder, he was like the Irishman when he caught the second snake—he let it alone.

Boz says of a man with a flushed face, that if he really were not in the habit of drinking rather more than was exactly good for him, he might have brought an action against his countenance for libel, and have recovered heavy damages.

Moral and Religious.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

The express mail yesterday was unusually dull. Murders, however, are as plenty as broken banks and yet the demand for hemp has not increased.—Mobile Examiner, April 24.

Why has not the demand for hemp increased? Because the laws are not enforced. More murders are committed in the slaveholding states in one year, than in all Italy in five; though the population of the latter is five times greater than the white population of the former. And these Southern murders are as strongly characterized as the Italian by a dastardly spirit; for the dirk of the "chivalrous South," is nothing more nor less than the infamous stiletto of Italy. This is not because the Southern people are naturally worse than any other people. They are precisely what all people would be with the same institutions, who permitted their laws to sleep.

Without interfering with slavery as a political question between the free and slave states of this Union, we shall exercise our right to speak of it in the abstract, as an institution. In this view of it, we insist that the ferocity which characterizes the South and South west, originates in slavery. When a body of men are accustomed from boyhood, to trampel upon the rights of another body, we cannot expect from them the utmost respect for the rights of each other. In governing slaves, fierce passions will be let loose and if not bridled towards inferiors, they will not be towards equals. Another consequence of slavery is want of education; for we cannot expect to find schools among the planting population, thinly scattered over a large surface. How can a school for white children exist in the country of Louisiana or Mississippi, when each white family is five or ten miles distant from any other white family.

In the Spanish and French colonies, slavery was always less burdensome, and the white population more orderly, than in the British, because controlled by a strong government in the mother country. Besides this, notwithstanding all that English historians have said about Spanish cruelty to the Indians and negroes, the Anglo Saxon race have invariably been the most cruel of all Europeans to foreign enemies or subjects. For the first, of those reasons, slavery has always been worse in the United States, than even in the British colonies. Thus we find the Anglo Saxon race, the most energetic, and the most tyranical of all, placed in the South in the position of masters over slaves, with no strong government to control them; and we consequently find it as we should find it at the free North or the West, under similar circumstances, in a state of ferocious unsubordination.

What is the remedy? A despotism that would govern all with a strong hand, or a determination of the majority to enforce the laws. Napoleon cleared Italy of assassins, by salutary severity, for he very sagaciously thought that hanging them by dozens, would save honest people by thousands. But as the South are not yet prepared for despotism, we suggest to all of its considerate citizens, the necessity of uniting in a determination to enforce the laws. Therefore, with a single eye to their own good, we ask the Southern people to lay aside their rifles, pistols and stilettos to rely for security upon laws, and to punish unrelentingly every man who violates them. They talk of honor, courage and patriotism. True honor is obedience to the laws. True courage is to fight only for the community. True patriotism is to render their country the abode of virtue, plenty, peace and security.

Life too short yet wasted.—Pliny makes a striking computation in regard to the shortness of life. I never recall it without being powerfully impressed with the truth. "Consider," he says, "the time spent in sleep, and you will find that a man actually lives only half his space. The other half passes in a state resembling death.—You do not take into the account the years of infancy, which are destitute of reason, nor the many diseases and the many cares of old age, those penalties of longevity. The senses grow dull, the limbs are racked, the sight, the hearing, the power of walking, of touch also, die before us; and yet all this is reckoned in the period of 'life.' But, short as life is at the best, those who complain of its brevity let it slide by them without wishing to seize and make the most of its golden moments. How much time do we waste in indecision, in vain regrets, delusive hopes and ungrounded fears. What a vast proportion of our precious existence is wasted in mere waiting—'waiting for something that seems necessary for our happiness, and the want of which prevents us from enjoying the present hour.'"

To Sabbath Breakers.—Brother Meredith,—there lived a man in this neighborhood who cared not for the Sabbath. He burnt his planting ground on the Sabbath; there came a rain on Saturday night, so he planted his tobacco on Sunday, and for fear of frost he cut it on Sunday. The woods caught on fire from hunters on Saturday night, and burnt his tobacco and barn on the Sabbath. So his crop began on the Sabbath and was consumed on the Sabbath.—Biblical Rec.

The brain of a hasty man is like a sooty chimney; it is continually in danger of taking fire from the flames beneath. The brain of a well ordered and quiet citizen is like a chimney lately swept; the sparks of passion pass through it, and escape without danger into the cooler regions of thought and reflection.

POETICAL.

☞ The following lines were received too late for insertion in our last number. The reader will find in them a well-written, but fearless castigation of a too popular vice, for which villages are famed, and which should be abandoned.—Ed.

Gossipping.

In fact, there's nothing makes me so much grieve,
As that abominable little-tattle,
Which is the end eschewed by human cattle!—Byron

The flying rumors gathered as they rolled,
Scarce any thing was sooner heard than told;
And all who told it added something new,
And all who heard it made enlargements too,
In every ear it spread, on every tongue it grew.—Pope.

Some have their fancies for the town,
And I in sooth, do frankly own
For reasons, I've the same;
Others, condemn the city bounds,
Its pent up domes, its mingled sounds,
And all its pomp and fame.

Now, 'tis not that I do not love
'Mid fresh green fields and flowers to rove,
By distance unconfined;
To watch the dancing of the rill,
List nature's tones, and climb the hill
Whence prospects bright unfold:

No!—these are charms, which we whose birth
Was 'mid the bustling scenes of earth,
Blend not with early dreams;
Yet have they power on every soul
Whose sensibility's control
Inspires to lofty themes.

But 'tis of villages I write,
Whose neat white cottages unite
To deck the rural scene:
Who mingle much that ought to bless
The homes with peace and happiness,
—So gladsome in their mein.

Yet, 'tis a truth too widely known,
For those it censures to disown;
That one foul stain doth cling,
To every village far and ner,
However peaceful it appear;
And this, is—gossipping!

To each, belongs a mystic band,
Who in one cause, go hand in hand;
And these of whom I sing,
Are maidens of no "certain age,"
And wives, which little else engage
But endless gossiping!

From house to house, these sisters move,
Bent on the errands of their love,
And neither old nor young;
Wise, winsome, witty, knave nor fool,
Escape the judgment of their school,
The lashes of their tongue.

In tranquil days, when with the sun
The course of village matters run,
And news doth rest its wing;
Their stock of scandal well-nigh spent,
Necessity must needs invent
New threads for gossiping!

And most mysterious is the power
They have to weave in one brief hour,
From scarce a single string,
An ample cloth by home-made skill,
Of texture such as may fulfil
Each end of gossiping!

But then its worth indeed to show,
The more 'tis worn, the more 'twill grow!
Until some later thing
(Since fashions change,) usurps its place,
For 'tis in something new we trace,
The charms of gossiping!

And oh! if chance a stranger come,
To seek near by, a quiet home;
"Hard times" soon cease to fling
Their shadows o'er the sister train,
For themes are now afloat again,
Themes ripe for gossiping!

For should the stranger stand aloof,
Well pleased to find beneath his roof
The quiet which he sought;
Envy a warp too quickly finds,
Which filled in haste by busy minds,
A marvel soon is wrought.

It serves to sweeten many a bowl
Of China's herb, whose swift control
Bright thoughts will quickly bring;
For scandal's tongue ne'er flies so fast,
As when around that cup is passed,
Which so aids gossiping!

But why enlarge upon a theme,
Which ill befits the poet's dream?
And yet whose sound should ring
Through every valley, hill and glade,
Until the bitter tide is stayed
Of senseless gossiping!

Cedar Brook, June, 1838.

CIRCULAR.

To all Collectors & receivers of the Public Money

Treasury Department, June 1, 1838.

By a resolution passed the 21st ult. Congress has declared, That it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to make or to continue in force, any general order which shall create any difference between the different branches of the revenue, as to the money or medium of payment, in which debts or dues to the Government may be paid.

To carry this resolution into effect, it has become necessary to issue new instructions to Collectors and Receivers of Public Money.

By the present laws specie and Treasury notes alone are expressly made receivable for all kinds of public dues, and you will of course continue to take them till otherwise instructed.

A circular was issued under the direction of the President of the United States, on the 11th of July, 1836, which, after a set time prohibited any currency from being taken in payment of the public lands except specie—no authority for the issue of the Treasury notes being then in existence.

This circular did not order any different medium to be taken for duties—yet, the various reasons contained in it were not applicable to the revenue from customs, and a practice had existed before, and has been continued since, to receive bank notes of a certain character in payment of duties.

In this condition of things, and without any new legislation, either to extend the provisions of that circular to every branch of the revenue, or to abolish the practice of taking bank notes for any branch of it, Congress directed, by the resolution above quoted, that no difference or discrimination shall be created or continued in force by any general order emanating from this Department. It has thus been made the imperative duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, either to require the collection of all the public revenue, in all its branches, in gold or silver, or Treasury notes, or to permit, under such restrictions as the existing laws impose, and as the safety of the public money seem to require, the acceptance of bank notes for lands sold as well as for other public dues.

However desireable it may be on some accounts, that the receipts and payments of the General Government shall be in the currency provided in the Constitution, and however inexpedient it may be to give undue encouragement to a different currency, which by its fluctuations in quantity and value often renders the wages of labor uncertain, gives instability to the value of property, and thus enables the artful to accumulate wealth at the expense of the unwary, it is not believed that this department can find a sufficient warrant in the proceedings of congress, or in the public opinion, to justify the sudden and total exclusion at this time of the notes of specie paying banks from reception for public dues of every description.

Important changes have also taken place since July 1836, in the condition of the banks and of business generally, which have diminished the necessity for unusual checks on excesses and over actions.

Influenced by these considerations, and by a desire to accomodate the public debtors as far is compatible with the restrictions of law and the safety of the pecuniary interests committed to my care, I feel bound to order the uniformity now required, by availing myself of the permission given in the resolutions of 1816, to receive the notes of banks, and by extending, under suitable limitations, the receipts of such notes equally to all branches of the public revenue.

The limitations as to the character of the notes receivable, will be such as are required by express laws, or by necessary implication. Some of these limitations have always existed: as one brief interval, been adopted in practice since the reformation of the Constitution, and are deemed essential to maintain a sound currency, so indispensable to the prosperity of trade and a healthy state of public morals. Others have been introduced more recently to promote fiscal convenience, the public security, and an equal standard of value.

1st. You will in conformity to the obvious intent of the resolution of 1816, take such bank notes only as are "payable and paid on demand in the legal currency of the United States."

2d. You will receive none of less denomination than $20; the reception of all smaller denominations being virtually prohibited by the second section of the act of April 14th, 1836, which forbids their being paid out to any creditor of U. S. Though smaller notes offered for duties could, from the nearness of bank a in most sea ports be taken, and easily exchanged before making payments, yet, from the remoteness of many land offices from banks, this could not be effcted there without much delay and expense; and as uniformity is now required, the provision must be made general.

3d. Nor will you accept bank notes of any denomination, unless the same be payable on demand, in gold or silver coin, at the place where issued, and equivalent to specie at the place where received, as is substantially required by the last mentioned act in respect to payments. These requirements can in the opinion of the department, be enforced with greater certainty, and unnecessary risk and loss more surely avoided, by confining the receipt, as has been the usage at some former periods, to the notes of banks situated within your state, and in the adjoining state. The credit of these notes can usually be best known—the profits of them more easily detected—and specie obtained for them with less delay when it is wanted for public purposes.

4th. You will not take the notes of any bank which, since the 4th. of July, 1836, has issued any note or bill of a less denomination than $5; the notes of all such banks being expressly excluded by the 8th section of the act of the 23d June 1836.

Great care will be expected from you in carrying into effect this, and all former circulars will in force; and particularly is it enjoined that Receivers be vigilant to furnish every facility to the Registers for making the monthly examinations, recently required, of the funds and vouchers on hand, and to guard against the imposition upon the land offices of bank notes not safe or equivalent to specie, and not well known to be receivable, according to the spirit of these instruction and the manifest intentions of the acts of Congress which they are designed to enforce.

Respectfully, LEVI WOODBURY,
Sec of the Treasury.

In Cincinnatti, it is almost impossible to rent a comfortable dwelling house. Families have been constrained to wait in hotels, and boarding houses in some cases several months before they could procure houses to live in. Rents are high; dwelling houses that three years ago would not have rented for more than three or four hundred dollars per annum, have been eagerly sought for at from five to seven hundred dollars this spring.—Ohio Journal.

Twenty-fifth Congress.

Friday, June 1.

The Senate was chiefly engaged with local business. The bill establishing Iowa territory passed.

In the House, the morning hour was passed in unimportant business.

On motion of Mr. Cambreleng, the House then resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. Howard in the chair, on the bill making appropriations for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities.

The question was on the amendment submitted on the 21st inst., by Mr. Bell.

Mr. Turney concluded his remarks in reply to Mr. Bell, in the course of which he commented upon that gentleman's courses at different periods of his political career with great severity.

Mr. Bell rejoined, and commenced by saying that he hoped he should be indulged with an opportunity to rejoin to the unprovoked attack of his colleague. He said that his personal relations with his colleague had not been familiar, but had always been civil, and not unpleasant: he knew but little of his course previous to meeting him upon the floor, and did not suppose his attack was dictated by personal malice or ill will. He looked upon him as the voluntary scavenger, not acting from the promptings of his own heart, but as the fit, apt, voluntary conduit of the malice of others. He had found the political associates of the gentlemen, in the house and out of it, equally destitute of private honor or public principle. He had been charged of them and against them in his own district, and in the vicinity of their homes, among their neighbors; but they were never willing to meet him there nor here. He hoped they would meet him privately and personally, and not continue to make these attacks upon the floor of the House. He had accused them at home and here of bad faith, falsehood and hypocrisy, but they had never thought fit to meet him there or here. He repeated that he did not think his colleague, (Mr. Turney) was actuated by private malice, but was the willing, voluntary instrument of others, the tool of tools.

Here Mr. Turney (who sat immediately before Mr. Bell) rose, and looking him in the face said it is false, it is false.

Mr. Bell thereupon struck Mr. Turney in the face, and blows were for a short time exchanged between them.

Mr. Turney repeated his assertion that it was false, and the attack was renewed.

Great confusion ensued. Members rushed from their seats, and cries were heard for the "Speaker!" and the "Sergeant at Arms!" Mr. Duncan said that such things must be the consequence of the abuse which was going on. One or two other members, while crowding to the spot, had some rather sharp verbal encounters.

After this disgraceful fight, the bill was reported to the house, with the grant of two millions to the Cherokees, and the additional sum of $1,150,000 for specific objects as proposed by the Secretary.

Saturday, June 2d.

Senate did not sit.

In the house, the Indian bill was ordered to be printed on motion of Mr. Cambreling, who thought the house mistaken or mad in voting away so much money.

Monday, June 4th.

Senate did not sit.

In the house, several public and private bills from the Senate were read and referred. Massachusetts and Connecticut Legislative resolutions respecting slavery were laid on the table! The Indian appropriation bill was then taken up.

The debate continued until evening, when it passed, 143 to 37.

Tuesday, June 5th.

In the Senate was mostly engaged with bills of a private nature.

The house went into committee of the whole, on bills relating to the territories.

Wednesday, June 6th.

In the Senate, Mr. Linn made a report accompanied by a bill for the occupancy of the Oregon Territory at the mouth of the Columbia.

The Indian Appropriation bill was reported.

In the house, the following Senate bills were read a third time and passed:

A bill to create the office of Surveyor of the public lands in Wisconsin.

To ascertain the southern line of Wisconsin.

To divide Wisconsin and establish the territory of Iowa.

The Rev. Mr. Holmes, of New Bedford, related the following anecdote at the late Anniversary of the American Seamen's Friend Society, in this city:

Two sailors once met—the one looked downcast and forlorn; the other accosted him. 'Shipmate, what's the matter?' 'Ah!' said the forlorn man, 'I am sick and destitute—I have no money to supply my wants.' The other put his hand in his pocket, and poured out his money without weight or measure. A merchant looking on, said, 'Shipmate now you certainly ought not to do so—you ought at least to take a note of him for your money.' 'I am no merchant, said the sailor; 'I never take notes for my charity.'

Postscript Writing.—George Selwyn once affirmed in company that no woman ever wrote a letter without a postcript. "My letter shall refute you said lady G.——. Selwyn soon after received a letter from her ladyship, when after her signature, stood—"P. S.—Who was right now, you or I?"

Com. Barron is exhibiting in the Rotunda of the capitol, at Washington, a model of some machinery invented by him, which will enable guns in ships of war to take a much wider horizontal range. The extent of range on the present plan is forty five degrees, but his invention will enable a gun to sweep at least ninety degrees, without any alteration of the port holes.

Singular Fact.—The human ear is so extremely sensitive that it can hear a sound that lasts only the twenty four thousandth part of a second.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

A writer who wishes his communication to be read, should not perhaps select so old a subject as mobocracy. The evils resulting, and the dangers to be apprehended from this cause, have been presented in every possible light, but they have fallen upon listless ears. Mobs are increasing in number and violence, and dangers are thickening a bout us; these warnings should therefore be repeated again and again, until men begin to see and feel, and act, as the importance of the subject requires. We must continue our endeavours to arouse the political body from its lethargy while life remains, as we would if one were perishing with cold, because, for it to sleep is death.

This apathy on this subject is the most alarming feature in the case. The reason of all men tells them that such things are disgraceful to the country, and highly criminal—they regret exceedingly that they have occurred, but do they feel as their fathers felt, when a lawless soldiery had butchered some of their fellow citizens at Boston? Do these events so fire their minds with indignation, that they rise in all the majesty of a sove*reign people, and declare that these violators of* law shall be signally punished, and that life, liberty, and property shall remain inviolate? Far from it. Those who do not openly justify the mob, content themselves with a mere expression of disapprobation. If a little removed from the scene of action, they are about as much agitated as when informed of a hurricane, or flood, which however deplorable, they cannot prevent.

But there is something more than this indifference, that demands our attention. We fear that the spirit that produces mobs is far more extensive than is generally imagined. We refer to that spirit which would seek redress for real or imaginary wrongs in some way, other than that afforded by law, or that would prevent the enforcement of constitutional and legal enactments. Read the papers for a week, and how many exhibitions of this lawless and merciless spirit do we find. The passengers of a steamboat outraged at the conduct of a negro, forthwith cast him overboard. The inhabitants of a city offended in a similar manner, burned a fellow citizen at the stake. The sensibilities of the citizens of peaceful Philadelphia shocked at the appearance of white and colored persons walking together, destroy the Hall in which they had assembled.

And these very men are not advocates of mobs in general, oh, no! They boast of their attachment to the laws and their firm reliance upon them.

The abolitionists who so loudly and so justly denounce mob justice, have in a recent movement of theirs, exhibited the same lawless spirit which they so strongly condemn. We allude to a resolution lately passed in New York, by which committees of vigilance, are to be organized throughout the country, to resist the return of renegado slaves and to prevent the execution of those laws which would restore them to their masters. What have we here! Men combining to prevent the execution of legal and constitutional enactments!—This is mobocracy beyond a doubt.

This hateful spirit is seen even in our Halls of Legislation. To cite no other instances, was there an American whose face was not suffused with shame, at the recent outrage on law and decency in the house of representatives, by Messrs. Bell and Turney? Mus: such things continue? Yes, they will continue, and worse will soon come, if that body is not purified from the foul contagion of bullies and duellists. Instead of ficticuffs, we shall speedily be startled by the glittering steel, and the shriek of the victim of assassination. Already do the members carry arms, and already has one of their members declared that his only reliance for safety was upon his "trusty weapon."

Tuesday, June 5th.

We frequently blame the public authorities for not suppressing such disturbances—but how unjustly! The magistrate can do nothing in such a government as this, if the majority of the people do not support him. He is but their agent, and executes their will. If the people then will aid and countenance the acts of a mob, or look upon them with indifference, the magistrate is powerless. Look at the case of the Mayor of Philadelphia a short time since,—when he sprung his rattle and called upon all good citizens to assist him, none, of the thousands there assembled, presented themselves. All, by their actions declared, that they considered the burning of the Hall just and proper, and that they did not wish the rioters punished.

The only redeeming power from the calamities which are threatening us, is in the people. Let them determine that the laws shall in all cases be enforced, that magistrates shall be supported in the performance of their duty, that the disturbers *of the peace shall feel the utmost rigor of offend*ed justice. Let them call upon their legislators in a language that cannot be misunderstood, and demand the expulsion of murderers and pugilists from among them. Let these things be done, and mobocracy will soon be among the "things that were."

Emancipation in the West Indies appears to have been productive of the best fruits. The decision of the Legislature of the island of Barbadoes, giving entire freedom to the whole slave population, 90,000 in number—after the 1st August next, is confirmed, as we learn by papers from Bridgetown the capital, of May 4th. One of the Public Officers states in a communication to the public that the experiment of immediate abolition in Antigua, has more than realized the expectations of its friends, and has entirely removed all doubts of its expediency. The population of Antigua is 37,000, of which number 30,000 are blacks; and yet 30 policemen only are required to administer the laws and keep order. We add a quotation from the address of the officer—

"The hope of reward sweetens labor," says the old proverb, and so it was with the workers. A gang of one hundred was employed on Saturday to hole, (for planting cane,) a six acre piece of stiff soil. They completed it by sunset and received two shillings currency each. The same work would have cost £60 in the time of slavery When I visited the island last November, I found a greater quantity of cane land in cultivation than I had known for twenty years previously."

It is further stated that land was rising in value in prospect of the advantages of free labor.

A company of New York Mechanics are now engaged in establishing a Mechanic's Banking Association in that city, with a million capital, under the general banking law.

THE UNION

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, June 12, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man.
Thomas Jefferson.

One of the most interesting subjects that has been brought before the present Congress, is the occupation by the United States of the Oregon Territory, comprising all that portion of our country lying west of the Rocky mountains. This valuable territory, including the whole of the fertile valley of the Columbia River, clearly and indispatably belongs to the United States, but it seems, is virtually claimed by Great Britain, through her Hudson Bay company. This powerful company have established a fort on that river, and several trading posts,—have built a saw mill, and have a steamboat running on its waters. Besides carrying on a very extensive and most profitable trade with the Indians, they have been for a long time cutting down timber in the heart of that territory and shipping it to the Sandwich islands. We hope earnestly that this important subject will be disposed of the present term, and the territory forthwith occupied by the United States. Great Britain has ever been a most grasping power, but we did not suppose she would lay claim to any portion of our territory; and that she has now done so, let her be ousted therefrom without delay, for the longer it is postponed the more difficult will the matter become.

Schools,—Take Notice.

It will be perceived by the Notices now up, that the School Committee of Westfield township have, agreeably to the late law, divided the township into ten districts. The boundaries of each are given immediately under the notice of the meetings in each district for the election of trustees which takes place on the 14th inst. at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when we earnestly hope the business of every District will be punctually attended to.

The committee would respectfully recommend that every School District attend to the licensing of teachers; and that a true list of all the children between the ages of 5 and 16, be forwarded to the committee by the 3d of July, with the names of the parents and guardians attached, as we believe a neglect will deprive them of their apportionment of the school fund.

By request of the Committee,
Dennis Colles, Chairman.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

In perusing your interesting columns of last week, my attention was drawn to the school Committee's notice of this township. At first, I can assure you that I was highly delighted at the promptness with which our late school law was responded to; but when I more closely examined the operations of the licensing plan, I was in much fear that it would injure the whole system and partially defeat its wholesome operations. The Freeholders have the power to declare it inexpedient to license teachers, but in their wisdom they otherwise decided. With them, however, I beg leave to differ, and for the following reasons:—First, the School Fund is so trifling that in many of the districts the people will not change their teacher for the advantages of it; and the teachers will not be willing to pass the fiery ordeal of examination for the same reason. Secondly in those districts where we have good schools, neither the teachers nor schools would be benefitted by the licensing; but it would be natural for them to get their certificates in order to draw a portion of the School Fund, (which you see appears to be requisite.)

Thus then it is clear that the best schools would draw all the money, and our poorer schools get none. I conclude therefore that the friends of education would lose the countenance and support of all that portion of the community who did not receive the fund, and they will denounce the system and condemn its friends. I would suggest then that the Freeholders of Essex when next in session revoke that part of their proceedings relative to the appointment of a licensing committee, and declare it inexpedient until the fund shall be larger, so that a school may be taught a longer time in each year: and it shall have become sufficient to defray a considerable portion of the whole expenses of education. Then apply the licensing, and attach a superintendent to the system, which in the late act was unfortunately lost, and we shall have, in my opinion, an efficient common school law.

Plainfield, June 8th.

For the Plainfield Union.

A Hint.

I once visited a fine little village, and became acquainted with a gentleman of a small family. He was then and had been for some little time engaged in the mercantile business. Business was very lively and flattering with him at first, and he being very animated with the fair prospects before him, stepped around very briskly and frequently trod on his neighbor's toes.—They being more experienced, took but little notice of it. Let us then be careful of our footsteps in all our engagements, as I once heard of a man who made an independent fortune, by simply minding his own business. C.

Plainfield, June 8th.

☞ We have received the first number of a paper just established in Morristown, under the title of "The Democratic Banner." Its politics, which is the first thing enquired of always when a new journal makes its appearance, is sufficiently indicated by its name—Alike opposed to whigs and conservatives, it strenuously and fairly advocates the political principles of the Van Buren party. In editorial talent, paper and printing, quantity and quality of reading matter, it is inferior to none in this state. The experiment of having two papers in that county has been tried two or three times before, but all have failed,—the "Whig," and "Post," both whig papers, expired after short lives for want of patronage. "The Banner" seems to have commenced with the elements of a long existence, which it will doubtless attain. "The Jerseyman" is too firmly established to need our good wishes, as we know it to be one of the most profitable establishments in the state. There is room for both in Morristown, and to both we cordially wish success.

Another scene most disgraceful to our country has occurred in our House of Representatives. Messrs. Bell and Turney now stand by the side of Graves and Wise, and too many others in congress, who have disgraced both themselves and nation. Full particulars will be found in another column, and we wish not to dwell on scenes of violence, which of late has been so common among us.

Also on Monday evening, during the debate on the Indian bill, a fracas commenced between Mr. Downing, of Florida, and Mr. Biddle, of Pittsburgh; which was prevented by the bystanders before blows were interchanged. Both were of the whig party. The other fight was between one of each party.

Oh, when will these things end?

There has been lately a very large meeting in Washington of the friends of African Colonization, and an Address to the people of the United States has been issued, which has been published in many of the papers. The address represents the colony and cause as prosperous and highly beneficial both to the free blacks of this country, and to Africa. The address concludes with an appeal for assistance by an addition to their funds.

From the New Brunswick Fredonian.

The late Treasury note act, gives permission to issue ten millions of threedemable paper money, in addition to the former issue, making in all, an issue of twenty millions; and equal to a new public debt to that amount.

The truth is, the first law authorized the issuing of ten millions of Treasury notes, and the late law permitted these same notes to be re-issued in case they should be redeemed before the time of their redemption. There cannot therefore possibly be more than ten millions out at any one time, which is materially different from the above statement of the Fredonian. The late report of the Secretary of the Treasury says that the ten millions has been issued, and that of them $5,200,000 have been redeemed, leaving still out, $4,800,000; "being equal to a new public debt to that amount;" to pay which there is due to the government some forty millions. We love our country so well that we are exceedingly well pleased that our treasury is not, nor ever likely to be, very near bankruptcy.

There appears considerable difficulty on our Canadian frontier, still, notwithstanding the arrival of a new governor with a large body of troops. Many refugees are along the line who will not engage in work, except by the day. Emigration from Canada to this country is going on rapidly, 25 families, embracing 100 persons, in 17 waggons, with 30 cows, came away at one time.

With the last number of the New York Mirror, we received some beautiful specimens of engraving on India paper, by Burton & Gurley, bank note engravers. Among them we notice portraits of Washington, LaFayette, and Mrs. Garner, all good likenesses.

The first number of the next volume of the Mirror, which will appear on the 30th inst. will contain a portrait of Charles Sprague, the poet, which is said to be an excellent likeness. The Mirror will soon have portraits of all our best authors.

Congress.—Thursday's proceedings.—In the Senate, a resolution offered by Mr. Webster calling on the Secretary of the Treasury, for a copy of his new order, which will be found in our columns, was adopted.

The Indian appropriation bill was taken up, and after considerable debate, passed by an unanimous vote, 40 members being present.

The house was chiefly engaged with the land bill from the senate, which, it is thought, will pass.

The Sub-treasury bill was to have come before the House yesterday, Monday, and many were pretty certain that it would pass, by a majority of 1 or 2. We shall probably know next week.

The N. Y. Express says, B. B. Thatcher, author of Indian Biography, now lecturing in London, stated lately that he had discovered the identical press at which Franklin worked when with Watts, on his first visit to London. It is no longer used, but the owner has refused seventy guineas for it as a curiosity.

Dutch Records.—The Rev. C. D. Westbrook D. D. of Peekskill, has been employed, for some time past, in translating the most important of the Dutch records, which have been preserved in excellent condition in the office of the clerk of the city and county of New York. Dr. Westbrook is said to be eminently qualified for the undertaking.

During a late election at Detroit, as a citizen was approaching the polls, a bribing demagogue slipped a ballot into one of his hands, and a five dollar bill into the other, with the view of securing his vote. The citizen, not having time at the hurry of the moment to give due examination to the two documents, put the ballot into his pocket, and the bank note in the ballot box.—Louisville Journal.

Michigan Agriculture.—They are taking the right steps in Michigan—some parts of it at least—to improve the character of their husbandry. They have organized agricultural societies, and offer premiums for the best specimens of various farming products.

The Mother of Lovejoy.—The Advocate of Freedom, a new anti-slavery paper, published at Brunswick, Maine, says;—"From Oldtown alone we have received thirty three subscribers, procured entirely by the efforts of the mother of Lovejoy.

Humane.—A lady in England has left a legacy of 2001. to be presented to the inventor of such a machine as shall, to the satisfaction of parliament, effectually supercede the work of climbing boys in cleaning chimneys.

Alton Observer.—The late subscribers to this paper have received, for several weeks past, the Cincinnati Journal, in its own name. This is in consequence of an arrangement, by which the Journal is to take the place of that paper, as the General Religious Paper. It is in contemplation we understand, to establish a paper devoted to anti-slavery, in some part of Illinois, which may probably bear the name of the Observer. But nothing definite is determined on.

Something to touch the heart.—Coleridge somewhere relates a story to this effect; "Alexander during his march into Africa came to a people in huts, who knew neither war nor conquest Gold being offered to him, he refused it, saying that his sole object was to learn the manner and customs of the inhabitants. Stay with us,' said the chief, 'as long as it pleaseth thee.' During this interview with the African chief, two of his subjects brought a case before him for judgement. The dispute was this; The one had bought of the other a piece of ground which after the purchase was found to contain a treasure, for which he felt himself bound to pay. The other refused any thing stating that when he sold the ground, he sold it with all advantages appurtenant and connected which it might be found to afford. Said the chief, looking at the one 'you have a son,' and to the other, 'you have a daughter; let them be married, and the treasure be given as a dowry.' Alexander was astonished.

'And what,' said the chief, 'would have been the decision in your country?" We would have dismissed the parties,' said Alexander, 'and seized the treasure for the king's use.' 'And does the sun shine on your country?' said the chief; 'does the rain fall' there? are there any cattle there which feed upon the herbs and green grass?' Certainly,' answered Alexander. Ah,' said the chief, it is for the sake of these innocent cattle the Great Being permits the sun to shine, the rain to fall and the grass to grow in your country.'"

A Decided Move.—Near two hundred voters of Hardin co. Ky. have published a pledge that they will vote for no candidates who treats at elections, or suffers others to do it for him, directly or indirectly. A little more of such nerve would soon make election treats unfashionable.

The Postmaster General is said to be decidedly adverse to the proposition to take off the postage on newspapers. It is said that the postage from newspapers and other printed matter, yields a nett revenue of about half a million of dollars annually.

He also alleges that the exemption would benefit the New York press alone.

The brig Scio, of Newburyport, Massachusetts was wrecked in fields of ice in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the 15th May. She was loaded with lime. Immense hills of ice stove in her sides; the water ignited the lime, and the crew escaped in the small boat, and after an 8 hours struggle got out into the open sea, and, and were picked up by the schr. George of Eastport, about midnight.

The Bank of the Metropolis, at Washington City was entered on the night of the 26th ult. and two cases of valuable jewelry, deposited there for safe keeping, carried off. A reward of five hundred dollars is offered for their recovery.

Ignorance.—A wise thinker has said that the reason why many people know comparatively nothing, is, that they can never bear to be told anything.

Horrid.—On Friday 10th ult. Austin Squares of Rochester, N. Y. shot his wife with a pistol. At 9 o'clock they went out to bring in some clothes which she had washed, and while gathering them, she heard the snap of a pistol and asked him what it was. He said nothing. She turned again to take down her clothes, when he snapped it again and the fatal charge entered her head, and she fell. He fled, but was immediately taken and committed to jail. He was sometimes intemperate, but was not then drunk. The cause is unknown. He will give no explanation or even admit that he shot her.

Good.—The Rahway Herald mentions that an association of sportsmen has been formed in that town, who are determined to put the game laws in force upon all persons without distinction, who shall shoot or have in possession a woodcock previously to the 5th of July—and they call upon all sportsmen in the vicinity to aid them.

Locusts.—Great numbers of these insects are at present to be found in the neighborhood of Baltimore. It has been said that they only make their appearance every seventeen years.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Billious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley:

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only need to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended- especially for scarlatina or worm fits which one of my family has been severely afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred in his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in most cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and disorders occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or deficiencies in any of the natural secretions, and especially those proceeding from a sedentary and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.

These pills when taken according to the direction, will be 10 excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and pancreatic secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise an irregular action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion, in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects he will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

Pamphlets giving a more general description of the properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at the Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

Somerset Orphans' Court.
Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of James Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the said estate—and to publish notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within twelve months from this time, by setting up such notice in five of the most public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debts demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or her action therefor against the said administrators.

Elias Hagar,
CLOCK AND WATCH MAKER, FROM NEWARK,

WOULD take this opportunity to inform the inhabitants of Plainfield and its vicinity, that he has opened a store in the building adjoining Dr. Craig's office, where he intends carrying on the Clock and Watch Repairing business, and hopes, by strict attention to his business to merit a share of public patronage. He would also take this opportunity to say that he will spare no pains to give general satisfaction, and as the old saying is, the proof of the pudding is eating it, he hopes you will take before condemning it.

Take Notice.

AS I have taken wholly upon myself the Lower Mills in Plainfield, which is now owned by George Wells, and has been formerly occupied by Wm. Wells, it is my expectation to attend to Customer work particularly. Those favoring me with their custom will be thankfully received and punctually attended to. It is my expectation to keep constantly on hand, Feed, Flour of good quality, and of all kinds, for sale, for cash.

As the public well know, or I am well aware myself of the difficulty attending keeping Books or trusting, and as promises are so fashionable with some of paying tomorrow, and as to-morrow scarcely ever comes with them, I am determined to sell for cash or in exchange for grain.

It is my expectation to be found at or near the Mill at all times and reasonable seasons, Seventh Day excepted, as I consider that day to be the Sabbath, and intend to observe it as such. PHINEAS RANDOLPH.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private research—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, unsurpassed, well executed, and designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—his well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

*Want of room only prevents us from giving fur*ther recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desired, that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; *and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and in*tention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—from which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE

New York Mirror.

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly esteemed Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts: embellished with magnificent and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood —and rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and containing articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original poetry—tales and essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and European—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors in literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. The best writers in the land will contribute to its pages and a splendid foreign correspondence will be maintained. The sum of $5000 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume of the Mirror, which, chiefly selection from the French, German, Italian and Spanish; and Selections from popular journals abroad will serve give it variety, and render it one of the most piquant fascinating and expensive repositories of elegant literature and the fine arts extant.

Its Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the arrangements entered into and consummated for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second of July next, warrant us in the pledge that, in every respect, but particularly in the literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its prominent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most vaunted popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on fine satin paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for a less term than one year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Reign of Law.—Let us learn our duty from the voice of Providence. We have been startled by the tumults of the people. Reposing in security under the shadow of a free government, we forget, in the applause of its liberty, to guard and elicit the strength of the law. Much as man loves liberty, he cannot exist in communities without efficient government.—The necessities of society demand order; and will have the order even of despotism rather than perpetual anarchy.

The only question with us is, shall we have the order which tyranny gives, or that which is produced by righteous law. We answer theoretically, Give us Law. But such answer is not enough. Will you sustain law? Shall it be enforced? If our laws cannot be enforced, individuals will seize upon arms in self defence; and the arming of individual citizens, for the work of legislation, because government is ineffient, is the signal of bloody anarchy —of the reign of terror.

Let this great nation pause and reflect. We are young; we have the elements of gigantic national greatness: we have the theory of government true enough—strong enough: but our theory must be put in practice.

Let the minister of the gospel hold up law of God, as the foundation of human law. Let him proclaim to the magistrate his duty—to the people, their duty of allegiance to righteous law.

Let the press speak aright, and loud and universal. Let the national voice be heard—Sustain the Law! Let the father teach the son to honor the law; and to honor our country's rulers because they administer the law.

Let the lawyer come forth clothed in all the dignity of his science; let him be more than the mere advocate of the client who pays him—let him be the advocate of the fundamental truths, the moral designs and the rightful supremacy of the law. Let him give to his own profession the honor which belongs to it.—N. Y. Evangelist.

Philadelphia Outrage.—We had hoped that the lamentable and cruel outrage and murder at Alton, would prove the last, as it was the worst, with which this community would be afflicted by these abolition meetings. We were destined however, to be disappointed. Popular fury, it seems, has no bounds. We must add that it never will have, so long as men calling themselves good citizens, manifest so criminal an apathy on the subject.

It is strange—it is frightful—that in one of our most populous cities, the second in the Union, any number of men can be found able, with thousands of spectators looking on, to set fire to a large building and consume it, thus jeopardizing property to an immense amount, and incurring also a great risk of human life, and then to retire quietly from the scene, almost unmolested. Such a fact speaks most disgracefully, not only for the honest and patriotic feeling, but for the courage of the people assembled, who witnessed the conflagration.—Portland Courier.

Rechabite Funeral.—On Sunday, Jan. 15th, the remains of brother Wm. Travis were interred in the Necropolis burial-ground, Low-Hill, Liverpool, on which occasion, the officers of the district and tents, with about 150 of the brethren, together with several hundred teetotallers, accompanied the funeral. After the funeral service had been concluded, the brethren surrounded the grave, and sung with great and powerful effect, the following beautiful hymn, which being concluded, the brethren and friends returned home:

Swiftly our moments pass away,
And soon they all will disappear
Then we must die, while 'tis day.
To stop the drunkard's mad career!

Soon will the final hour arrive,
When all our care and toil shall cease;
O! may we each with order strive
To dry the springs which banish peace.

The procession made a great impression on the teetotallers and the public at large, and has caused an increase to the order.—Eng. paper.

The cotton crop this year is an extraordinary product, compared with previous years. Bets are made at New Orleans that it will not fall short of $1,800,000 bales. This is the real gold of our staples and the excess of two or three hundred thousand bales over last year will keep the foreign exchanges in our favor while we are backed by such wealth, which is more substantial than specie.—Star.

It is said, that at Louisville, Kentucky, a gentleman is retained by the Dry Goods stores to stand outside of the "store-rooms," and invite the idle persons who walk in. Why is so, (adds the New Era,) we advise some of our Broadway loungers to go there and see if there are any vacancies.

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

Mr. BOND said he rejoiced that the attention of the House and of the country was again invited to the subject of retrenchment and reform. He was aware that these terms had become somewhat hackneyed, and he almost feared that their frequent repetition here had rendered them trite and unmeaning. They had been used, it was well known, with great effect, to put down one Administration and elevate another. That end being attained, they seemed to have performed their office; as far at least as the party now in power are concerned. All must admit that we have had no practical retrenchment or reform.

Mr. B. said he wished gentlemen now in power to admit that they had amused, if not deceived, the People of this country with a mere "fiscal sketch." If they would not take this conclusion, then he called upon them to specify any retrenchment or reform which they had accomplished. But, sir, if they fail in this, as I think they must, then I demand their reasons for not carrying out their great and salutary system of reform, for which they stood solemnly pledged before the country.

I am unwilling to believe that the terms retrenchment and reform have lost their just and virtuous sense. The people of this country will determine whether the necessity for such measures had passed away with the simple elevation of certain men to power.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, must be well aware that something more than this was promised. You professed, sir, I mean the party with which you act professed, to be moved by the purest and most sacred regard for the welfare of the People. We find recorded here, and in the Senate, a solemn pledge to carry into effect a systematic reform, if you should be placed in power. This was done, sir, in March, 1839, and you have held undisturbed possession ever since. During that time, now going on ten years, what part of your pledge has been redeemed?

I desire to conduct this discussion fairly, and with entire accuracy as to facts. I wish so to state them too, that all may form a just opinion in relation to the sincerity and good faith of those whose conduct may be brought under review.

Was it really true, sir, that the expenditures of the Government were unnecessarily large? Had the President too much power, and was there a necessity for restraining it? Was the patronage of the Government so enormous as to require checks to be placed on it? Was this patronage used for political ends, especially the patronage of the press? Was it true that the freedom of the press and the security of our liberty demanded that the printing patronage should be withdrawn from the several Departments, and the State department in particular?

All these inquiries are suggested by the declarations and avowals of the present dominant party when they sought for elevation. But lest gentlemen may have forgotten the precise charges made against the Adam's Administration, I beg leave to extract from certain documents in the House and of the Senate, in which these briefs and complaints, with the promised reforms, are duly recorded.

The first, in point of time, is a report made to the Senate in 1826, by a select committee, (of which Mr. Benton was chairman,) "to which was referred a proposition to inquire into the expediency of reducing the Patronage of the Executive Government of the United States." In this document Mr. Benton reports:

"That, after mature deliberation, the committee are of opinion that it is expedient to diminish or to regulate by law the Executive patronage of the Federal Government, whenever the same can be done consistently with the provisions of the constitution, and without impairing the proper efficiency of the Government. Acting under this conviction, they have reviewed as carefully as time and other engagements would permit them to do, the degree and amount of patronage now exercised by the President, and have arrived at the conclusion that the same may and ought to be diminished by law."

For this purpose that committee then reported six bills; one of them proposed to regulate the publication of the laws and of public advertisements; another had the imposing title—a bill to secure the elections of the faithful electors and disbursers of the revenue, and to displace defaulters." But besides its alluring title, that bill also contained the following provision:

"That in all nominations made by the President to the Senate to fill vacancies occasioned by the exercise of the President's power to remove from office, the fact of the removal shall be stated to the Senate the same time that nomination is made, with a statement of the reasons for which such officer may have been removed.

The other four bills also looked to the restraint or reduction of the President's power and patronage. It is needless to read them. The report proceeds:

"The committee do not doubt but that there are many other branches of executive patronage, in addition to those which are comprehended in the provisions of these bills, which might be advantageously regulated by law. Far from thinking that they have exhausted the subject, they believe that they have only opened it, and that nothing more can be done at this time than to lay the foundation of a system, to be followed up and completed hereafter.

Mr. Bond said that, notwithstanding a series of years had elapsed, and Mr. Benton and his friends had full power, the people had looked in vain for a superstructure on this "foundation of a system" of reform which compensation of members, during the first session of each Congress, be reduced to $2 per day, from and after the first Monday in April if Congress should sit beyond that day."

Mr. Bond said he would not read the report to the House: but he hoped this notice of it might aid in recalling it to recollection, whereby it will be seen how much has been proposed and how little had been done. Here, too, it will be found, that in concert with their co-laborers in the Senate, the House reformers describe most graphically the extent and power of patronage, and for all their discovered abuses they suggest remedies. But, Mr. Speaker great as this work was represented to be, the gentlemen from New York (Mr. CAMBRELENG) and his friends told the country in this report that they had made only a beginning, whatin hunter's phrase is called a mere priming. They then inform us that nothing more in the way of reform could be done by them, until the People should drive from the citadel of power those who then held it, and place it under control of these zealous reformers. This was done. This spacious report, like its twin sister of the Senate was trumpeted aloud by its friends, and at public expense, under the order of the House, many thousand copies of it were scattered throughout the country. The people read, and, honestly believing it took the alarm, and placed these reformers in power.

And now, Mr. Speaker, after your undisturbed possession for nine years, what has been done? Have you reduced any expenditure, corrected any abuse, or provided any restraint in the power of patronage? No, sir, no. But, on the contrary, your party in power have made all public expenditures greater than before: you have practised the very abuses of power of which you complained, and have not provided any restraint on Executive patronage! We have thus a practical illustration of the abuse of the identical power of which your friends, when sounding the alarm, gave only a theoretic description.

Mr. Bond said the resolution now under consideration still looked to reform, and especially to the correction of the abuse of power in regard to the public printing. The gentleman who offers it, (Mr. HOPKINS,) though acting with the Administration generally, is not blind to the abuses which may be committed. He is still demanding reform from principle, and is not satisfied that abuses have been corrected by a simple change of men. I am surprised Mr. Speaker, to find this resolution opposed by the Administration. The gentlemen from New Hampshire (Mr. CUSHMAN) resists it on most extraordinary grounds. He admits abuses, but says it is impracticable to correct them, and therefore useless to pass the resolution. Is it possible that such an objection can be openly avowed and sustained here? The gentleman says it is the usage of party to dispose of this patronage in its own way, and that, he never heard of any complaint against Mr. Adam's administration for so doing. Here sir, is another open avowal of the doctrine 'that the spoils belong to the victors.'

(Mr. CUSHMAN here explained, and observed he had not said the spoils belong to the victors.)

Mr. BOND admitted that the gentlemen had not used those identical words, but this was the doctrine of the party with which he acted, and a distinguished member of that party, now the Governor of New York, (Mr. MARCY,) had, when a member of the Senate of the United States, openly used those terms and justified this usage of party. The friends of the Administration uniformly practised under this precept, whether they believed the theory. I do not wish to do to the gentlemen from New Hampshire any injustice, and will read from his remarks as published and he will then have an opportunity of correcting them, if erroneously printed. The gentleman is reported as having said:

"It was well known, that since the establishment of the Government the dominant party, whichever it might be, had invariably employed what has been called, if you please, partisan printers and partisan editors. But why should they not do so? So long as the Opposition had the predominancy, they used to supply their own partisan printers, and no complaint was made about it. Why should any complaint arise now? He saw no reason for it."

Here, then, I think, sir, a position is taken and terms used in effect the same, and tending directly to the doctrine that the 'spoils belong to the victors.' But can it be possible that the gentleman thinks he is correct and sustained by the facts when he says that no complaint was made against Mr. Adam's administration on account of the exercise of the printing patronage? Has he forgotten that Isaac Hill, the present Governor of his own state, was the editor and publisher of a newspaper called the "New Hampshire Patriot," and that the discontinuance of the publication of the laws in that paper was considered so outrageous a persecution for opinion's sake, that it may almost be said to have given him his subsequent political elevation and consequence. The discontinuance of Isaac Hill as printer of the laws was occasioned, too, by his publishing a libel on the lady of the President, without the least semblance of truth, and so grossly indecent that Mr. Randolph, though a zealous opposer of Mr. Adams, said that it ought not even to be read on this floor. The occasion, however, was seized, to bring the subject of public printing under discussion in this House, and Mr. Saunders, of N. C. introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of State to report what changes had been made in the newspapers printing the laws, together with his reasons for such changes. A long and spirited debate followed; and as gentlemen seem to have such imperfect recollection of the events of that day, some little reference may perhaps be usefully made to what was said in that debate. It will be observed that the resolution of Mr. Saunders, and those who supported it, required reasons to be given for a removal from office. Since they came into power, however, that doctrine has been denied and repudiated.

Mr. BOND said he proposed to prove by this debate that the present Administration came into power declaring that the printing patronage of the government was inordinate and dangerous: that it ought to be restrained and regulated by law: and, in fine promising if elevated, to withdraw its exercise from Executive hands. The mover of that resolution (Mr. Saunders,) said:

"I trust I shall not be accused of getting up this call for party purposes, nor be told this is a party business. He was not to be told that the sentiment involved in this matter was too small to influence the editors of this country." "The usual sum thus distributed could not exceed from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars annually." "There were $2 per square allowed for publishing the laws." "It was not of the expense that he complained, but the purpose by which it was controlled." "It was thus rendered subservient to the will of the Executive Government, and to the personality of party in the Government, to control the freedom of the press, and to enlist throughout the country, that powerful instrument in behalf of the views of the State Department. In this respect, it was more dangerous than the celebrated sedition laws."

From the Democratic Review for June.

The present state of the Democratic Party, and the Sub-Treasury System.

The Democratic Party in our opinion after the long possession of power by the same party, [illegible] and a representation of [illegible] being of the state of affairs [illegible] they condition than it has been for some time. The main body has proved itself sound. Under all the disorganization of its ordinary discipline, alarmed, paralyzed by dissension, and deserted by the leaders long trained on, it has stood truly by its principles with a firmness which has excited our high admiration and pride. It will triumph. Its success is certain. Every state and every district in the Union might be swept over by the torrent of popular delusion and panic, which has caused a temporary defeat in the elections on many points where we were long accustomed to prevail—yet would not our confidence in our cause and in the people waver for a single instant! No exertion can keep the bubble of delusion much longer in its state of inflation. The great measure is now too clearly made up to admit of misrepresentation; and as the correct understanding of it gradually works its way downward, to penetrate the whole broad mass of the people, they cannot fail to prove true to their natural instincts and long settled principles. The question is, Bank or constitution—an independent government of the people, on the acknowledged principles of the constitution, or a final submission, once for all, of the neck of our young and free nation to the yoke of bank dominion. The language of the Administration is this: "Let us part. In both forms the experiments of our union has been fully tested. In both it has failed—let me alone. You are beyond the sphere of my legitimate action. Remain within the proper limit of yours. I would confine myself to my duties according to the clear letter and spirit of the constitution. Support yourselves by your own sound credit and merits, based on your capital, prudence and good faith. Do not seek to rest artificially upon mine. I leave you to yourselves and to the own states by whom you are created. There can never hereafter possibly be peace or harmony for either of us in a renewal of this union. The Democratic party has staked itself on the great principle of the divorce, and whether immediately victorious or defeated, will never abandon it. The continuance of the perpetual agitation of this conflict which you insist on making, certainly can be profitable only to a few partisan leaders who are seeking to use you as stepping stones to power, and as instruments for the restoration of a national bank. I will not again expose myself to the fluctuations, uncertainties, and hazards of this connection. Do you withdraw from the political arena, and return to your proper commercial duties. I seek not to injure you. None but the unsound and insolvent among you can have any fair reason to object to my determination to be independent, and to maintain a secure, uniform and constitutional fiscal system, in the discharge of my limited duties; by keeping and disbursing my own revenue; and by confining myself to that only fixed standard of value which "is the law of the land at home and the law of the world abroad," and to which you acknowledge it to be your own highest duty to conform your own paper emissions—though the misfortune from which I desire to be hereafter exempt, is that you are perpetually wandering far from it.

Such is the language of the administration to the banks. On the other hand what is theirs to the government? You shall not be independent of us. You shall not collect and disburse your revenue yourself. You shall not anchor the treasury of the country by that obsolete and uncivilized standard of value, of which we have nothing to say but that it is in hostility to the Constitution or no constitution, we will regulate the currency for you as for the rest of the people, and you shall have nothing to do with any other standard than our paper. If the people are content with it what right have you to complain? We will not rest on our own capital, credit, and our commercial business alone—you shall give us your credit and especial countenance also. And if you do not surrender at once at discretion, and submit to our dictation, without further impertinent discussions of the principles on which we are organized and conduct our business, we will sweep you out of power, as summarily as we overwhelmed you in the New York elections last fall.

Such are substantially the attitudes of the administration and the banks. Which is to prevail?

The pyramid of the democratic cause may be shaken by temporary shocks, but it cannot be overthrown. All these popular delusions and panics soon exhaust themselves, and obey the general law of reaction. Great is truth and it will prevail. Our confidence in the people is unwavering—and in this sign we shall conquer. Our party will come forth from the present crisis, 'redeemed, disinthralled, and regenerated.' This is the last desperate effort of the whigs.—The independence of the Public Treasury being once established, their cause falls prostrate. It is evident to every one, it felt fully by themselves. Their principal leaders must retire in despair from the open field of battling like the waves with the rock of democracy. The main body of their party, and of the rising generation, will be relieved from their artificial state of prejudice and delusion generated by party excitement, and must obey the natural impulse of the age and the genius of our country, and become democratic. The paralysing influence of a large anti-popular minority upon the free action and development of the democratic principle in our system, will thus become in a considerable degree lightened. The mercantile career is opening upon our party and its high and holy cause; a new era is indeed, already marked in the commencement of this article, dawning upon the country; and it requires but firmness, courage and confidence in these great principles which can never deceive or fail, to carry it safely through the present crisis, to the realization of those noble and glorious hopes.

POETICAL.

These lines please us much, both in sentiment and metre. They were written by a lady whose age, but last week we were unable to find room for them. We are unable to say whether they are original or not; if they are, we earnestly request Celinda for a continuance of favors.—Ed.

Contentment of Mind.

My mind to me a kingdom is;
Such perfect joy therein I find,
As far exceeds all earthly bliss,
That God or nature hath assigned.
Though much I want that most would have,
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

Content I live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice:
I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look what I lack, my mind supplies.
Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with what my mind doth bring.

I see how plenty surfeits oft,
And hasty climbers soonest fall;
I see that such as sit aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all.
Thus get with toil and keep with fear;
Such cares my mind could never bear.

No princely pomp or wealthy store,
No force to win a victory,
No wily wit to salve a sore,
No shape to win a lover's eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall,
For why? my mind despiets all.

Some have too much, yet still they crave,
I little have yet seek no more;
They are but poor though much they have,
And I am rich with little store.
They poor I rich; they beg, I give;
They lack, I laud; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at another's loss,
I grudge not at another's gain;
No worldly wave my mind can toss,
I brook what is another's bane;
I fear no foe, nor fawn on friend—
I loath not life, nor dread mine end.

My wealth is health and perfect ease,
My conscience clear my chief defence;
I never seek by bribes to please,
Nor by desert to give offence;
Thus do I live, thus will I die—
Would all did so as well as I.

I do not joy in earthly bliss,
I weigh not Croesus' wealth a straw;
For care, I care not what it is—
I fear not fortune's fatal law.
My mind is such as may not move
For beauty bright or force of love.

I wish but what I have at will,
I wander not to seek for more;
I like the plain, I climb no hill;
In greatest storms I sit on shore
And laugh at them that toil to vain
To get what must be lost again.

I kiss not where I wish to kill,
I feign not love where most I hate;
I break no sleep to win my will,
I wait not at the mighty's gate;
I scorn no poor, I fear no rich—
I feel no want, nor have too much.

Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,
Their wisdom by their rage of will;
Their treasure is their only trust;
A cleaked craft their share of skill;
But all the pleasure that I find,
Is to maintain a quiet mind.

The Arkansas Gazette of the 30th ult. furnishes the following information concerning the Indians in the western part of that territory:

We regret to learn that considerable dissatisfaction is daily manifesting itself among some of the Creek emigrants, who have been removed within a year or two. Our informant says they show but little disposition to plant corn, or to do any thing for their future support. In several instances they have destroyed their own fences and other property, and given other evidences of a turbulent spirit; and the old women among them have been heard to declare, as soon as the green corn is fit to pull, the white people must look out.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Morning, June 19, 1838.

"For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Politics.—Neutrality.—It is now somewhat over a year since we took the management of the "Union," into our hands, and during that time, we have given general satisfaction as respects our neutrality. We have at all times kept so near the middle course, that the whigs call us of the Van Buren party, and the Democrats call us whigs,—and that is near enough. We have done this mostly by keeping silence on the subject of politics,—have not meddled much with the topic,—but we begin to think that a paper without politics, is rather dull and uninteresting both to editor and reader, and so from mere love of mischief, we have given our readers this weak a dish of politics, the best we could obtain for both parties.

We think the most profitable course for a neutral paper to take is to give extracts from the productions of the most eminent of both parties, then men can judge for themselves, and decide understandingly. This is the principal advantage of having a neutral paper, it enables all to read the statements of both friend and opponent, without taking two papers. If one hears only the story of his own party, how can he make up his mind as to the merits of the question, satisfactorily even to himself?

Mr. Bond's speech, the publication of which we this week commence, is one which will probably produce much effect, much more than many more able speeches, by greater men. It is better calculated to tell than the speeches of either Clay or Webster, and will be more generally read and understood. For this very good reason the whig papers are very generally re-publishing it. Whether we shall publish it all is uncertain, but in that case shall publish the answer to it when it appears, probably soon.

The article following it is from a very able democratic periodical, published monthly at Washington, and is but a part of a long one, for the whole of which we could not find room. To the party of whom it is written, it will be very acceptable, and as far as our limited experience permits us to judge, it is generally correct.

We have several communications on hand which want of time and room compels us to defer to a more convenient opportunity.

As the times are improving newspapers are springing up in our state, on all sides, like mushrooms. A very neat and well-filled semi-weekly has just been commenced in Jersey city, under the title of "Jersey City Advertiser, and Bergen Republican." It is whig in politics, and bids fair to do well, being conducted with talent, and in a place that much needs a paper, and ought to support one well.

A special session of the South Carolina Legislature has passed an act, entitled "An act for rebuilding the city of Charleston," raising on the credit of the state the sum of two millions of dollars, to be loaned to the sufferers for ten and 20 years, to enable them to re-build the stores they had burnt.

Mercer county has decided by a very respectable plurality of votes, to place the new county buildings in Nottingham township, on Mill Hill, close by Trenton. The places voted for were Trenton, Lawrence and Nottingham.

Mobocracy carried out.—In Ohio, a mob recently destroyed a Methodist meeting house, by mistake! They intended to burn the Mormon temple.

The United States Mint coined, during the last month upwards of half a million of dollars in coin of all denominations.

The New York Conference of the Methodist E. Church has just been in session. It censured and suspended some of its ministers for the crime of abolitionism. The New England Conference, of precisely equal authority, now in session in Boston, on the contrary are three-fourths abolitionists, and it is hoped they will go as far the other way.

☞ We are publishing an edition of the speech of the Hon. W. K. Bond, of Ohio, on the resolution to separate the government from the press, in a pamphlet form, in good sized type. We print it for subscribers, but have about 200, yet unengaged, which, if called for soon we will dispose of to the editors of the neighboring towns, at the rate of $2,50 per hundred. It makes a large pamphlet, of 30 superroyal octave pages. It will be ready for delivery to subscribers on Saturday afternoon of this week.

Another Letter.

Mr. Editor:

Your correspondent "C" has certainly "astonished the natives," by the depth of his meaning, and the wisdom of his advice. It is to be hoped that his remarks will be of inestimable service to posterity even if they should unfortunately not add to the length of our new-fangled.

I remember, too, having once seen a merchant of no family at all, who for a while drove a brisk trade, but business becoming dull, he took himself to receiving shinplasters below par, and pay them out again at par, in this he certainly minded nobody's business but his own. In conclusion, I would advise all those who have been warned by magistrates not to deal out explosive articles to boys, to be careful how they crack off their squibs in a newspaper, the business in both cases being a small one, productive of no profit and but little credit to the party most concerned. It also behooves one who is so fearful of having his toes trod on, to beware of dabbling in things by which he may get his figure burnt.

Owing to the great expense of getting our paper about the country, we make next to nothing, when these terms are strictly fulfilled. These terms do not apply to the first volume.

But little of interest has transpired in Congress since our last. The Sub-Treasury bill has been a little talked about; its friends are confident that it will pass, and the Conservatives are as confident that it will not pass, and the whigs think it will not but are in great fear that it will.

Schools,—Take Notice.

It will be perceived by the notices now up that the School Committee of Westfield township have, agreeably to the late law, divided the township into ten districts. The boundaries of each are given immediately under the notice of the meetings in each district for the election of trustees which takes place on the 14th inst. at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when we earnestly hope the business of every District will be punctually attended to.

The committee would respectfully recommend that every School District attend to the licensing of teachers, and that a true list of all the children between the ages of 5 and 16, be forwarded to the committee by the 3d of July, with the names of the parents and guardians annexed, as we believe a neglect will deprive them of their apportionment of the school fund.

The Rum-Selling Deacon.—The following letter was addressed to the Hon. Stephen Fairbanks of this city, in consequence of a public expression of his opinion, that penal enactments are not the best means to further the great good work of temperance.—Ed. Her.

Boston, April 23, 1838.

MY DEAR SIR—I fully believe, that in all cases, in which there is a reasonable prospect of succeeding in our efforts for the removal of intemperance by moral suasion, by appeals to the reason and the feelings of mankind, such means should be employed before all others. But I believe there are cases, not a few in which there is not the smallest probability of prevailing by such means as these. In a free country and with institutions like our own, intoxicating liquor can be sold for one man and not for another man, and wolves were never converted into shepherds, more effectually, than by those legislative provisions, which confine all discretion, as to the character of the customer and the quantity he may consume, to individuals, whose interests urges them to sell as much as possible.

Out of ten thousand examples, I will offer two simple illustrations of the case in hand, both having occurred within this city. A blacksmith, has a drunken wife. He inquires if nothing can be done to put an end to the evils of intemperance. He is told that much has been done. "Nothing," he replies "to meet my case. My wife will neither hear a lecture, nor read a temperance story, nor sign a pledge. She pawns my tools and even her children's clothes for rum, which she buys of a church member, who, when I complain of his conduct and tell him how very wretched he makes my home, and beg him to step over and look at my drunken wife and crying children, puts his hand upon my shoulder and bids me leave his store." Now my dear sir, there is no remedy for this, but penal enactment. You see it. You feel it.

I will now set before you one of the most extraordinary examples of the paralyzing effects of the rum traffic, which has ever come to my knowledge. During the last month, I called at the shop of a deacon in this city, and the following dialogue ensued between us.

Pray, deacon," said I, "do you continue to sell rum?"

"Why, yes, sir;" he replied, "I sell a little."

"I looked over your bills last evening," I continued, "and I find I paid you more than $400 for grain the last year, and I have paid you nearly that amount annually, for several years. I must quit you deacon unless you give up the sale of spirit."

"Really, Mr. Sargent I don't sell much. I should be very sorry to lose your custom."

"It is of no importance, deacon, how much or how little you sell. It is a mutual to the cause of religion to have deacons selling rum. I had rather ten common persons should sell it than a deacon. You have confessed to me that your clergyman disapproves of your conduct, and has talked with you upon the subject."

"Why, Mr. Sargent, it would be a great loss to me, to give it up, my grain customers would go to other stores, and—"

"Deacon, I am astonished to hear you talk in this manner. I should have quitted you long ago but for the hope of prevailing upon you to give up this ugly business. We have talked upon this subject frequently. I at one time supposed you would give it up, when poor Johnson died."

"Well, I don't know as 'twas ever proved he had his liquor at my shop."

"No, deacon, it was never proved but by his dying declaration. I myself was not a very intemperate man; he had money laid up in the savings bank; he was driving a load of manure into the country, and bought a bottle of gin at your shop. He drank till he was drunk, fell over the tongue of the wagon, in attempting to jump upon it, and was crushed beneath the wheels. This happened within a few rods of my own residence in Roxbury. This poor fellow was removed to the poor-house, and died a few days after."

"I really don't want to lose your custom, Mr. Sargent."

"Well, deacon, I will not drive you to a decision in this sudden manner. Think of it seriously and I believe you will give it up. It is a horrible occupation for a deacon. I will call to learn your determination in a few days."

At the end of three days I called again. The deacon came, readily to the side of my chaise as I drove up before his door.

"Well, deacon," said I, "what is your decision."

"Why, I've pretty much made up my mind to give that up."

"Really, deacon," said I, "I am rejoiced."

"Oh, sir," cried the deacon hastily interrupting me, "not the traffic, but my office in the church."

Now, my dear sir, I will not inquire if you can devise any other means for the recovery of such as these, than penal enactments. You may well attempt to stop the pestilence which walketh by noon, with a bulrush, as to turn such individuals as these from the paths to broken constitutions and broken hearts, by moral suasion.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the Stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysteria, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever, Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you and believing that it will be a great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit from any medicine as readily and effectually for excluding worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the time of operation, but on the contrary soon prevented vomiting, and for the servants sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. Believing that its influence is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true corrections of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or ominously lawful endeavor to carry forward our principles to the utmost of our ability.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it worth the price, by the best intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

PROSPECTUS

New York Mirror.

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly successful Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts; illustrated with magnificent and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood—and rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and containing articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original poetry—tales and essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly for and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—comtices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, and remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors in literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. Its former character for the kind will contribute to its pages, and a spirited foreign correspondence will be maintained. The sum of $5000 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume; Besides which, choice translations from the French, German, Italian and Spanish; and selections from popular journals abroad will serve give it variety, and render it one of the most piquant fascinating and exquisite repositories of elegant literature and the fine arts extant.

Its Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the succeeding numbers will be one and contained for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second of July next, warrant to us the pledge that, in every respect, but particularly in its literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its pre-eminent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most talented popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on beautiful paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars per annum, payable in advance. No subscription is received for a less term than one year.

Take Notice.

AS I have taken wholly upon myself the Lower Mills in Plainfield, which is now owned by George Wells, and has been formerly occupied by Wm Wells, it is my expectation to attend to Customer work particularly. Those favoring me with their custom will be punctually observed and carefully attended to. It is my expectation to keep constantly on hand, Feed, Flour of good quality, and of all kinds, for sale, for cash.

As the public well know, or I am well aware myself of the difficulty attending keeping down Book work, and as promises are as fashionable with some of paying to-morrow, and as to-morrow scarcely ever comes with them, I am determined to sell for cash or in exchange for grain.

It is my expectation to be found at or near the Mill at all times and reasonable seasons, Seventh Day excepted, as I consider that day to be the Sabbath, and intend to observe it as such. PHINEAS RANDOLPH.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

N. B.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars for the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several standard writers.

To select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and important doctrines of the gospel are exhibited in this work with exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, convenient, and adapted for family worship as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of Sabbath School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We cheerfully recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every christian man should seek to possess in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume, at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's Department is designed to fit young men for the Freshmen and Sophomore Classes in College.—Also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages ofa Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$3 to $4.00
Higher branches,	5.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times conveniently had.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or batructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.—Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at the Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to ascertain where the pupils are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire. It is thought unnecessary to say that the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Scotch Plains, May 1838

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

Mr. Saunders concluded by saying that it was his "intention to take this power from the state department, and place it elsewhere." A member from Tennessee, (Mr. Houston,) afterwards Governor of that state and now President of Texas, sustained Mr. Saunders' resolution, and denied the right of the Secretary of State to change the publication of the laws for opinion's sake. He alleged that the practice of that Department "had been to allow an individual, who might be personally opposed to the views and opinions of the Head of the Department, if he was honest and capable as a public officer, to retain his place." He asked "if changes had been made in order that the patronage of the government may flow in a particular channel? Such a course would gag the free expression of opinion." He said

"Patronage is not a thing local and circumscribed. It sees every little ramification into which it can by any possibility insinuate itself. It is like the cancer in the human body; it seizes on every vein and artery, one after another, nor stops its progress till the sufferer sinks, and then the work is done."

Next came Mr. Hamilton, of South Carolina, the chairman of retrenchment committee to which I have already alluded. That gentleman said:

"These eighty-two presses would be put on the diet of a wholesome regimen, and in the course of a salutary discipline. The sturdy and independent would be turned out to feed on such offals as they might be able to pick up, until the whole pack should open in full and harmonious cry, in one common note, from the sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the Treasury, to the most starveling turnspit that barks on the farthest verge of our frontier."

Mr. Bond said he would not stop to inquire whether we did now realize, in the present official organ, the Globe, 'that sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the Treasury." Mr. Hamilton continued:

"Is it necessary that the Executive should have a government press, to be paid for by the people out of the public treasury, to sustain the measures of the Administration, right or wrong?" "If," said he, "a Secretary of State can so apply the patronage of the government as to nourish to yet half-starved eighty-two presses in order to praise every thing the Administration should do, and subject their proprietors to the punishment of the loss of this patronage if they dare to censure its measures, this forms distinctly a Government patronage, which is more alarming to the liberties of the people than the organization of the whole of General Brown's army of 6000 men, formed into a guard of the palace. Weighty two presses can be made to speak as it were in one voice, that all the Government does is excellent, and all those who are opposed to them are false and factious, this constant combined and concerted language will soon have a tendency to make those who hear little else believe all this is true."

Mr. Bond hoped the House would pardon him for this long extract. Mr. Hamilton from whose speech it is taken, was at the time a friend of Gen. Jackson, and zealously engaged in elevating him to power. In thus describing the Government patronage over the press, that gentleman said he was merely warning the country of the danger of instituting it. I hope sir, it will not be out of order to draw on your remarks, in aid of my present purpose. The sentiments which you expressed are perfectly just, and must command the approbation of all impartial minds.

I have preferred sir, sustaining the resolution now under consideration by the arguments and illustrations of the friends of General Jackson rather than to attempt any new suggestions.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that some friend of Mr. Clay, then Secretary of State, intimated that the resolution of Mr. Saunders savored somewhat of the Spanish inquisition. At this your indignation was aroused, and you exclaimed;

"Inquisitorial, sir! And has the time arrived in this country when it is deemed inquisitorial respectfully to ask a public officer, who is responsible to the people whose pressure enforces war, for the public reasons for the private (motives) of his conduct? Is it insulting to demand of a public officer to explain and account for his conduct? Is the transatlantic doctrine, that 'the King can do no wrong,' to be introduced here? Though we have no alien and sedition laws, are we to have what is tantamount to them? Are the public functionaries of the Government to be wrapped up in the robes of office, and to be held irresponsible to the people or the people's representatives? And are all those who have firmness and independence enough fearlessly to inquire into the conduct of public men, and the manner in which the public money is expended, to be denounced by the partisans and servile adherents of the house that now reigns, as factious opposition sir? Sir, (you continued, Mr. Speaker,) this power of suppressing public opinion is improperly lodged where it is. It is, to say the least of it, subject to abuse, and may be improperly used for the purpose of muzzling and influencing the liberty of the press."

That being the case, you proposed, sir, to remove this power of appointment from the Department of State, and vest it somewhere else, where it would be more safely and properly exercised." The country is aware, Mr. Speaker, that you have continued to be a member of this House ever since you made the remarks just quoted, now more than eleven years. Some expectation was cherished that you would, when in a majority here, practice under these opinions, and remove this printing patronage "from the Department of State, and vest it somewhere else, where it would be more safely exercised." I am sorry, sir, that this public expectation has been disappointed. I can only account for it by supposing that your various political engagements and high public station have withdrawn your attention from this important subject. There is some consolation, however in knowing that you have won an opportunity of redeeming your pledge, and the friends of retrenchment and reform indulge the hope that you will do it.

I hope you, sir, will not think this an "inquisitorial measure. It is, indeed, true that when the representatives of the people during the last session of Congress, attempted to look into the departments of the Government, Gen. Jackson openly resisted it, and said such a measure was "worse than the Spanish inquisition." More sir; he, in effect, gave orders that it should not be tolerated. Mr. Speaker, did not your cheek then mantle with honest indignation? and if you had held a seat here, instead of the chair you occupy, would you not have again exclaimed, "is the transatlantic doctrine, that the King can do no wrong, to be introduced here?" Or were you constrained to admit that, under the boasted system of reform, "the public functionaries of the Government are now "wrapped up, in the robes of office," and "held irresponsible to the people or the People's representatives?"

Mr. B. said he hoped he had, by this time furnished some evidence to the House and to the gentleman from New Hampshire, (Mr. Cushman) in particular, that the exercise of this printing patronage by Mr. Adams's Administration, was not only questioned but openly condemned. The friends of Gen. Jackson, so far from pretending that it was impracticable to correct the abuse of this power, pledged themselves to the country that they would and would, when in a majority provide a remedy. He would submit it to the People to say, whether this had been done. Was it not notorious that the extent of this printing patronage had been greatly enlarged under the present dominant party? Is not the number of newspapers in which the laws are printed very considerably increased? Is not the ordinary printing patronage of the several departments far greater now than formerly? And as to the public printing for Congress, had not a resolve under the promised retrenchment that we were almost induced to believe that the term was used in irony by those from whom the People expected economy.

I now propose, Mr. Speaker, to show what seductive influences this patronage over the press carries with it: and, for this purpose, I must again invoke the aid of the Jackson reformers, using their own arguments, and the very language in which they admonish the country of the base uses which would be made of this power. I hope gentlemen will recollect the remarks made on this subject, and which I have already given to the House from the speech of Mr. Hamilton, the Chairman of the Committee on Reform. I reserved for the present branch of the argument a peculiarly striking and descriptive message in the speech of Mr. Houston, before alluded to. He undertakes to describe an honest editor, of good principles, and deserved influence, and then adds that such an editor as this "May not be disposed to bow or bend his principles for the sake of favor from a particular administration or individual? It may be necessary for certain plans and interests, that such a man as this should be gagged or prostrated. In that case, a very politic course would be to start a new paper somewhere near him, and to get for the editor some talented fellow—and low that will 'go the whole;' who is troubled with no principles on any subject, but who will support a certain interest through thick and thin; who will pursue no course of his own, but will ever be ready to take his cue from a certain quarter. After getting him some one or two hundred subscribers, and using every expedient to make him some character, he must then have the printing of the laws and schools of the Government taken from him, and he will be ready for action. Sir, I will not say such a press is to be established and paid for out of the contingent fund; I am only represented in such a manner that I say that such a new beginner must have patronage, although it be in direct opposition to the interest and will of the people."

Thus spoke Mr. Houston in 1827. Let us now pause for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and inquire whether those who know so well the use and abuse of this power, have not proved themselves skilful adepts in the practice of applications. Let us direct our attention to the official newspaper, the Globe, and see if Mr. Houston has not most aptly described "its rise, progress, and present state."

We know, sir, that at the commencement of Gen. Jackson's Administration the official newspaper was the United States Telegraph, published by Duff Green. Things went on pretty smoothly for awhile and until, as was said, some jealous rivalry sprung up between the then vice President of the United States and the present President, Mr. Van Buren, which was then Secretary of State. It was said Green was suspected of cherishing a stronger partiality for the Vice President than for the Secretary of State. But I do not profess to be familiar with the causes of this family jar. Report said that, the Telegraph was not discontinued abruptly, as the official organ, but was gradually supplanted by the Globe, and its editor, Francis P. Blair, brought here for that purpose from Kentucky. Among the means resorted to for this purpose as complained of by the Telegraph, were orders or requests to various Postmasters throughout the country to furnish lists of its subscribers. The Globe was then sent to them, claiming to have the special confidence of the party.—In this way it was initiated into favor among the subscribers of the Telegraph, and in due season the latter paper was wholly abjured. I have no knowledge of all the measures taken "that at all hazards the paper be sustained," and will leave it for others who know Francis P. Blair better than I do, to determine whether the Administration, in furnishing an editor for the Globe, succeeded in getting a "true trusty fellow, a fellow that will 'go the whole' who is troubled with no principles on any subject but who will support a certain interest 'through thick and thin.'" This I know, that the Administration fostered and cherished the Globe with an immense amount of patronage, and in that way gave it strength and influence. That paper was first published in 1831. The whole amount paid for printing by the Executive Departments in 1832 and 1833 was $113,346, 21, of which $47,245 42 were paid to the Globe and the residue to various other printing establishments, editors, and publishers throughout the United States. In 1834 and 1835, the whole amount so paid was $83,966 50; of which sum, a part, say $40,473 16, was paid to the Globe, and the residue again divided as before. For the next two years, ending with September, 1837, the several Executive departments paid out, for printing, the enormous sum of $142,804 68! Of this, the Globe received $24,381 27, and the balance was divided and subdivided—the spoil being thus given in due proportions among the whole pack, from the sturdy mastiff that howls at the door of the treasury," down "to the most starveling turnspit that barks on the farthest verge of our frontier."

But it will be observed that, so far, I have stated the amount of the Executive patronage of the press only. In December 1835, the Globe obtained the printing for the House of Representatives, and for the two years ending on the 30th September, 1837, its editors or publishers were paid, on that account, $105,914 53!! It thus appears that, for the last six years, the Globe newspaper has received from the Government, as published documents prove nearly $220,000. It has received indirectly, and from office holders and expectants, no one can tell. I will not designate each of the innumerable host of editors and printers on whom this patronage has been showered. Some of them have received small sums; others again, do not quite equal the Globe editors; but I will name a few who seem to be among the preferred, and then leave it for their readers to say whether their papers can be supposed to be under the wholesome regimen of Treasury diet.

I find that Hill & Barton, of New Hampshire, have received, in about six years between $7,000 and $8,000. During the same time, Shadrach Penn, jr. of Kentucky, has been paid $10,000, nearly half of which has been within the last two years. During the same time, the firms of True & Green, Chas. G. Green, and Beals & Green, of Boston, have been paid $27,204 76! In the course of two years, Medary & Manypenny were paid $2,958 60; Paine and Clark $2,837 53; Mifflin & Parry of Philadelphia, $1,820 26; Medary, Reynolds & Medary, $1, 585 and Samuel Medary of Ohio, $3,002.—All these payments were made by the Post Office Department; and in addition to this printing patronage, some of these parties enjoyed advantageous contracts in the same Department, for the supply of paper and twine," connected with their printing of blanks. These contracts for "blanks, paper, and twine," when examined, as they were by the committees of investigation, disclose the practice of the most reprehensible partiality in the Postmaster General for certain political favorites. I have not examined to see if the other Departments did not simultaneously bestow a part of their printing patronage on these same individuals. This further act, however is disclosed by the printing accounts of these Departments: that, for some time past, they have thrown large portions of their patronage into the hands of Langtree & O'Sullivan, of this city, who are publishing a periodical journal, the "Democratic Review," which professes to be a literary work but, at the same time, devotes its columns to the cause and defence of the Administration, with a zeal equalled only by the Globe, and, in at least one of its articles recently published, shows as little regard for justice and truth, I think, as that paper does.

The Executive patronage of the press was one of the great chapters of reform into which the famous retrenchment report of this House was divided. It is there stated as an alarming fact, that the amount paid for printing and advertising "by the Executive Department at the seat of Government for the [then] three last years, (1825 1826 and 1827,) and by the General Post Office, in two years, was $71,830 51. In the same report, we are also told that the printing for Congress, the Senate and House included, from March, 1819, to December 1827, being a period of eight years, amounted to $271, 883 37. These were thought to be extravagant expenditures, and retrenchment demanded and promised.

I beg the House to indulge me a few moments in holding up to their view, and especially to the gentlemen from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng,) who was an active member of that committee, a mirror, in which the practical reform may be seen. If the gentlemen, or the party, shall find the object a hideous one, I can only say the picture reflected is the work of their own hands.

For the six years ending on Sept. 30th 1837, the several Executive Departments and the General Post office paid out $340,116 for their printing. In order to get 3 years as to compare it with the term and amount before stated let us take half of it, say $170,058

Deduct the amount stated by the committee, 71,830

Amount of increase every 3 years by the reformers, $98,227

I also find that, in six years ending on the 30th day of September 1837, the printing for Congress, (Senate and House,) and inclusive of certain Documents, books, and engraving, amounted to $751 883 37. That operation will show that the Reformers have paid, in the legislative patronage of the press, $589, 701 25 more in six years than the Whig party paid in eight years!!

Having thus shown the amount of, and how this patronage is now used by the Executive, it will be appropriate to see what the friends of Gen. Jackson said would be the consequence of such use. The committee, in their report, speak of the moral mischief upon which this patronage acts "as a power that seems irresistable," and say they "will not stop to argue what they predicate as an undeniable fact, that, by the employment of the expenditures of the contingent funds of the departments, a Government press is to all intents and purposes effectually established, as much so as if there were an annual item in the appropriation bill for the purpose of purchasing the joint and harmonious action of one hundred papers in the uncompromising vindication of those in power, and in unsparing abuse of those who are not.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Going as Freight.—An Irishman whose funds were rather low, had footed it all the way to Wheeling, and was still desirous to get as far as Portsmouth, thence to proceed by canal to a point not far distant from the latter place where work was to be obtained. Having worn his toes through his boots, and the heels of a pair of old shoes quite low, he gave up the idea of using "Shank's mare" any longer. There were plenty of steamboats puffing and blowing at the landing, and he became fascinated at the idea of such an easy mode of conveyance.

'Captain, dear,' said he, stepping on board a beautiful craft—'Captain dear, an what'l you charge to take me to Ports mouth?'

'Seven dollars in the cabin.'

'Seven dollars! arrah! seven dollars!' Why, captain, dear, I havn't the half of that same.'

'Oh never mind that, Pat, I'll take you as a deck passenger for three dollars if you'll half work your passage, that is help the hands to wood the boat.'

Pat mused some minutes on this proposition, and asked,

"And captain dear, what'll you take about a hundred and sixty pounds freight for?'

'I'll charge you seventy-five cents for that.'

'Then captain you see, I'm just the boy that weighs that—so you can enter me as freight, and I'll stow away snug somewhere below stairs.'

A proposition so novel pleased the captain highly, and calling one of the hands, he gave directions to have Pat stowed carefully away in the hold—and ordered the clerk to enter on the freight list—'One Irishman 160 lbs.

Pat kept snug until he reached Portsmouth, a distance of 356 miles—having shown himself but twice, and for only a few minutes at a time during the whole passage. There he paid his freight, 75 cts. honorably, and was next seen with his bundle, tramping along the tow path of the canal for his desired destination. —Balt. Athenæum.

Dr. Charles T. Jackson, in a letter published in the last number of Silliman's Journal, says, 'I have discovered the actual bituminization of peat in a bog, at Limerick in Maine. The substance is in fibrous masses, like brown coal, and burns with yellow flame and smoke. It is found ten feet from the surface of the bog.' When this substance is heated in a glass tube, it gives out abundance of coal gas, and bitumen distils off freely. This, I believe, is the first instance in which peat has been observed actually passing into bituminous coal. I have also found another curious fact, viz. three beds of anthracite coal in slate, that has been melted into horstone by a great mass of trap rock.

The Difference.—A Calvinist once heard an Arminian preach, and after service was ended, the latter demanded of the former how he was pleased. The Calvinist frankly acknowledged that he was not edified. I want to know, said the other, what could have been the reason? Did I not preach works and grace? Yes, said the calvinist. And do you not believe in works and grace? Yes, I do. what then can be the difference? said the other. Why, said the calvinist, you place works at the bottom for a foundation, and grace for the top as the consequence, whereas, I place grace at the bottom as the foundation, and works as the consequence. In other words, you make works the tree, and grace the fruit —whereas I make grace the tree and works the fruit. Indeed, said the Arminian, I see no great difference in this, since we both embrace the essentials. All the difference, rejoined the Calvinist, is, that your house is built bottom upwards, and whether such a house is fit for residence, or will stand or fall in the decisive day, you can judge.—Hartford Watchman.

A tin pedlar called at a house lately in the country to dispose of his wares. The good lady offered to buy, but the vender must certainly change a bill, if she took a quarter of a dollar's worth. The pedlar readily consented to do so, provided the lady would take shilling pieces, for he wished to get rid of them. 'Shilling pieces!' she exclaimed, 'why what is the matter with them?'—'Nothing now,' said he, 'but to morrow they will probably be down to ten cents.' The good woman immediately brought out four or five dollars in shillings and sixpences, which she had hoarded up, and expended the whole sum in the purchase of the pedlar's wares, declaring that she wasn't going to lose so much by the plaguey shilling pieces.

Where's all the change?

THE TOCSIN.

Wake! children of the MEN who said,
"All are born free!"—Their spirits come,
Back to the places where they bled,
In Freedom's holy martyrdom,
And find you sleeping on their graves,
And hugging there your chains, ye slaves!

Ay—slaves of slaves! What! sleep ye yet,
And dream of Freedom while ye sleep!
Ay—dream,—while Slavery's foot is set,
So firmly on your necks,—while deep,
The chain her quivering flesh endures
Gnaws like a cancer, into yours.

Ha! say ye that I've falsely spoken,
Calling ye slaves? Then prove ye're not
Work a free press!—ye'll see it broken,
Stand to defend it—ye'll be shot,
O yest but people should not dare,
Print what "the brotherhood" wont bear,

Then from your lips let words of grace,
Gleaned from the holy Bible's pages,
Fall while ye're pleading for a race,
Whose blood has flowed thro' chains for ages,
And pray, "Lord, let thy kingdom come!"
And see if ye're not stricken dumb.

Yes, men of God ye may not speak,
As by the word of God ye're bidden
By the pressed lip—the blanching cheek,
Ye feel yourselves rebuked and chidden,
And if ye're not cast out, ye fear it,
And why?—"The brethren will not bear it,

Since, then, thro' pulpit, or thro' press,
To prove your freedom ye're not able,
Go like the Sun of Righteousness,
By wise men honered,—to a stable
Bend there to Liberty your knee;
Say, there that God made all men free,

Even there, ere Freedom's vows ye've plighted,
Ere of her form ye've caught a glimpse,
Even there are fires infernal lighted,
And ye're driven out by slavery's imps.
Ah, well! "so persecuted they
The prophets of a former day!"

Go then, and build yourselves a Hall,
To prove ye are not slaves, but men!
Write "Freedom" on its towering wall!
Baptize it in the name of Penn;
And give it to her holy cause,
Beneath the Ægis of her laws;—

Within let Freedom's anthem swell:—
And while your hearts begin to throb,
And burn within you—Hark, they yell,
The torch, the torrent of the mob!
They're Slavery's troops that round you sweep,
And leave your hall a smouldering heap!

At Slavery's beck, the prayers ye urge
On your own servants through the door
Of your own Senate,—that the scourge
May gash your brother's back no more,
Are trampled underneath their feet,
While ye stand praying in the street!

At Slavery's beck, ye send your sons
To hunt down Indian wives and maids,
Doomed to the lash! Yes, and their bones
Whitening mid swamps and everglades,
Where no friend goes to give them graves,
Prove that ye are not slavery's slaves!

At Slavery's beck, the very hands
Ye lift to heaven, to swear ye're free,
Will break a truce, to seize the lands
Of Seminole or Cherokee!
Yes—tear a flag that Tartar hordes
Respect, and shield it with their swords!

Vengeance is thine, Almighty God!
To pay it hath thy justice bound thee:
Even now I see thee take thy rod;
Thy thunder, leashed and growling round thee—
Slip them not yet, in mercy! Deign
Thy wrath yet longer to restrain!

Or let thy kingdom, Slavery, come!
Let Church, let State recieve thy chain!
Let pulpit, press and hall be dumb,
If so "the brotherhood" ordain!
The muse her own indignant spirit
Shall still speak out: and men shall hear it.

Yes; while at Concord there's a stone
That she can strike her fires from still;
While there's a shaft at Lexington,
Or half a one at Bunkers' Hill,
There shall she stand and strike her lyre,
And Truth and Freedom shall stand by her.

But should she thence by mobs be driven
For purer heights she'll plume her wings;
Spurning a land of slaves, to heaven
She'll soar where she can safely sing.
God of our fathers, speed her thither!
God of the free, let me go with her!

TEXAS.—As an evidence of the character of the population of Texas, we will state a fact which we gather from an authentic source, viz; That Robinson the murderer of Helen Jewett, is now a clerk in one of the counties of that illustrious Republic.—Hudson River Chronicle.

The steamboat fare from New York to New Haven is reduced to 50 cents.

Extract from the Debate in the House of Representatives, June 6th, on an amendment to reduce the salary of the Govern or of Iowa, from 2000 to $1500; and of the Superintendant of Indian Affairs from 1500 to 1000—Containing a brief reply to Mr. Bond's Speech.

Mr. Mercer made some observations on the general character of the bill, and the extent of the country, and in opposition to the bill.

Mr. Adams followed in a review of the charges made of extravagance that had always been made against the Administration that had existed and the constant cry of retrenchment and reform. He would always join in that cry, and where he could find extravagance he would endeavor to put it down. But when the complaint was merely against the salary of a Territorial Governor, whose jurisdiction extended over a great section of country, and the effort was to save a thousand dollars, it was not such retrenchment as he was in favor of. He did not think the salary proposed in the bill was too large. He then went into some statements to show the vast extent of the country included in the proposed Territory of Iowa, and contending that it was much greater than had been represented by Mr. Mercer.

Mr. Bond referred to the remarks of Mr. Adams upon the general charges of extravagant expenditure; and alleging that the Administration party, having the majority in both houses of Congress, were responsible for the extravagant expenditures of the Administration: and the Government was not to be absolved from responsibility by throwing it upon the Houses of Congress.

Mr. BENTON said that he rose merely to reply briefly to the honorable member from Ohio, (Mr. Bond.) That gentleman, with an air of triumph, asked why the members of the Administration did not come out and defend it against the charges of extravagance, that he had made against it?

Sir, said Mr. B. the honorable member certainly has presumed greatly upon the ignorance of the public, and particularly on that of his constituents when he is making the most reckless and unfounded statements. The gentleman has not specified any particular act of the Executive as being extravagant but takes shelter under general charges; and, sir, has, in the zeal of partisan heat, ove leaped everthing like a correct statement of facts.

Sir, he with an air, told us that this Administration came into power upon the charge of Executive extravagance, and on its pledge to reform it. Now, sir, the gentleman must know that his first statement is directly unfounded in fact, that under such circumstances, there could have been no principle involved. The petty extravagance of no executive would be sufficient to found a party upon. No, no, sir; the gentleman must know that this Administration, as well as the preceding one, came into power upon higher and nobler principles, which the gentleman seems purposely determined not to tell the people of this country or his constituents. Little could have been effect by the reform in any department, by the sacking down of salaries, &c.

No, sir, no friend of the Administration ever thought of coming into power under such circumstances; nor did their opponents. The great measures upon which the Republican party came into power were founded on principle; and that principle was in their opposition to a most prodigal and impracticable system of internal improvement then about being carried on in this country, by which millions and millions of the People's money would have been squandered.

Sir, at that time, from a statistical statement, made out by Judge Smith, then a distinguished Senator from South Carolina, there were projects in contemplation, about being admitted to the sanction of Congress, of internal improvement, to the amount of eight hundred millions of dollars, which, if carried into effect, would have imporerished the whole nation. Sir, this extravagance it was, that the Democracy rallied with a determination to reform. Sir, little did they then think of your Executive reform, farther than he gave countenance to this prodigal system; to have done so, would have been a mere piece of hypocrisy.

Secondly, he said, there was another great principle upon which the present party came into power. It was founded in their opposition to your odious, unequal, and unjust tariffs, which were extracting millions and tens of millions yearly from the pockets of the people, to be scrambled for by log-rolling politicians in this House, and to be voted away to the more favored States and objects. It was their opposition to the tariff that caused the Democracy of the North, South and West, to rally against the former Administration, the honorable member from Massachusetts was at the head. Yes, sir, this was the reform that the Democracy went for, and this they got, and the country has realized the beneficial effects of it.

And, sir, thirdly, let me tell the gentleman, that it was against an extravagant system of forts, fortifications, and light houses, that the present party went in opposition to his party, under the lead of the member from Massachusetts.

The United States Bank also was one of the great subjects on which the two parties differed and brought one of them into power, and sustained them under the former and present Administration. Sir, it was against the extravagance of that institution, that aroused the freemen and Democrats throughout the country: But the gentleman does not feel very anxious that these truths should be known, however anxious he may be to put it forth on other subjects. Sir, the gentleman misstated every fact, in goal, no doubt, in relation to which this Administration came into power, and most adroitly endeavors to shift the true issue from great principles to mere petty and pitiful acts of individuals, which will and must necessarily occur under every Government from its very nature.

Sir, this gentleman had labored long and often to implicate the Executive into some act of extravagance or folly. Yet he had never brought forward any specific charge—any tangible proposition. It all seemed to be for effect abroad. If the gentleman would dare bring forward any proposition, he would go with great pleasure with him to correct any individual abuse. Why did not the gentleman do so, if he knew of so many abuses? Sir, he was doing himself and the country great injustice to conceal or blind these subjects, knowing them as well as he did, or pretended to know them.

Sir, the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Adams) has correctly informed the gentleman from Ohio, that the Executive cannot be properly responsible for those acts of the Government, which he has denounced as extravagant He cannot appropriate a single dollar without the assent of this and the other body of this Congress. If, then, there is extravagance, it is here —here, in this House. Let the gentleman commence here, and see how many of his own party he will leave uncon cted. I dare him to do it. I dare him to attempt it. I challenge him to look to the journals of this House—see the yeas and nays upon every extravagant appropriation, and if a majority of his friends have not voted for every one of them. Yes, sir, I challenge the gentleman to do this.

Then sir, how does it comport with candor and honesty, to be continually crying against the other party, for that which they themselves are most guilty of.

Sir, were I to be guilty of such a course, I should blush to meet my constituents, or to appear before an intelligent American public.

There was other causes of the increase of public expenditures, that he would remind his honorable friend of, for personally, he assured him, he considered him so, and was proud of it. It had in a great measure been owing to the immense issues of paper money, that had swelled out and given an additional and fictitious value to every thing consumed or employed by Government—with hundreds, if not thousands, of other most satisfactory causes to any impartial, rational mind. But this was no time to go into detail in relation to those matters, and it would be out of order to do so upon this subject. He hoped the gentlemen would, however, bring in some proposition upon this subject; and as a friend of reduction and reform, he would pledge himself to go with him to his heart's content.

This, however, the gentleman seemed studiously to avoid. Perhaps it was because nearly every similar attempt of special committees had never failed to cover their authors with shame and contempt, and end in the disgrace of their party.

He hoped that the gentleman would not be discouraged, however, but would bring forward his proposition for a scaling committee, as he would most assuredly lend to him his little aid in carrying it on.

New Invention.—Frederick H. Southworth, now attending school, at Homer, Courtland co. N. Y. has invented a curiously constructed waterwheel, called the "Current or Tide Wheel."

It is described in the Courtland Republican, as being placed in a horizontal position, so far under water as to be entirely free from any obstructions of ice or flood wood; the buckets, which are placed on the outside of the wheel, that the current both opens and shuts them, and by so doing creates what is called a double power; the buckets being filled by the current on one side, remains open until it turns so far around as to come in contact with the current of the stream on the opposite side, when it is immediately shut and in shutting opens another directly opposite which is immediately filled by the current, thus causing a continual and steady motion to the wheel. The experiment tried, was upon a wheel about six or seven inches in diameter, and placed in a current of about three or four miles an hour.

The ingenious contriver has had a beautiful silver medal awarded to him for his invention, by the Utica Mechanics' Association.

From the Cherokee Country.—We learn from the medium of authentic publications in the Georgia Recorder of the 5th instant, that Major Gen. Scott proceeded to carry into effect his orders to oblige the Cherokees, after the 23d ultimo, to evacuate the territory heretofore held by them within the limits of the State of Georgia. His measures met with no resistance. On the 29th, he had under his control three thousand Indians; and, before this time, it is supposed that the murdering Indian remains within the territory of Georgia.—The manner in which this duty has been discharged by that distinguished General is praised for its kindness, humanity, and freedom from violence. This information is gratifying; for surely there is enough to appeal to the public sympathy in the destiny of these original lords of the soil, without adding to it unnecessary violence.

The Wool of the North and the Cotton of the South.—The cotton growers of the south appear to believe that the prosperity of the country, and almost its very existence, depended upon the cotton crop; and that there is hardly anything else of any value raised in the country. What will they think when they are told by competent judges, that the clip of wool in the northern States is an incons derable an item in the products of the free labor of the North, that the producers hold the whole of the last years clip in consequence of the decline in price, without any anxiety to sell it—estimated to be nearly if not quite equal to the entire cotton crop of the United States; that this mere item in the produce of the North, embraces a capital of sixty millions of dollars in sheep, and one hundred and fifty millions in pasture lands, by a valuation not half so extravagant as that of the southerners in their estimate of the value of capital employed in cotton growing.—Newburyport Herald.

African Slave Trade.—The Boston Courier gives the following shocking incident concerning one of the captured slave ships, which left Africa with 440 slaves—

Sickness was among them on the voyage. The captain, by name Collingwood, pretending to be short of water, called his officers together, and said, "If the slaves died a natural death, it would be the loss of the owners of the ship; but if they were thrown alive into the sea, it would be the loss of the underwriters!" and he argued that it would not be so cruel to throw the poor sick wretches into the sea, as to suffer them to linger out a few days, under the disorders with which they were afflicted. The mate objected, as there was no present want of water; but the captain prevailed, and he caused to be picked out from the ship's cargo 123 slaves, who were by his orders, thrown alive into the sea with fetters on them.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Dread'ul Steam Boat Accidents.

On Saturday morning, the 16th inst. the new and elegant steam boat Washington, running between Detroit and Buffalo, on lake Erie, was entirely destroyed by fire, near Silver Creek. About forty lives were lost, and a large amount of property.

The steam packet Pulaski left Charleston for Baltimore, on Thursday, 14th inst. with 200 passengers, and a crew of 37. On Friday night, the boiler exploded during a severe gale, about 40 miles south of Wilmington, N. C. and 30 miles from land. She sunk about an hour after the explosion. A few of the passengers and crew were saved in the boats, among them two ladies, but it is pretty certain that not far from one hundred and eighty lives were lost.

We bel eve no nation on earth is so much afflicted with these terrible disasters as the United States—the fault is with us somewhere—and it should be found out and prevented.

Congressional.—The proceedings of Congress for the week past have been of considerable importance, though but little has been decisively acted upon. The Sub-Treasury bill, which is now the most important bill to be acted upon, is still undecided, but its passage is considered more certain than a week ago.

Friday, June 15th.—In the Senate, the bill to establish an additional Land Office in Wisconsin was ordered to a third reading.

The annexation of Texas was debated some in the house.

On Saturday, in the Senate, the bill for a Surveyor general in Michigan was defeated, Mr. Clay vigorously opposing it.

J. Q. Adams made a very eloquent and effective speech on the Texas question, in the house.

Monday, June 18th.—In Senate, memorials from Philadelphia, praying for the passage of the Sub-treasury bill and against a National bank were presented. Also from the District of Columbia, for the establishment of Diplomatic intercourse with Hayti.

The Northeastern boundary question was then taken up.

In the House, on Tuesday, they went into committee of the whole, and took up the Sub-treasury bill. Mr. Cambreleng spoke at length in favor of the bill, and was followed by Mr. Pickens on the same side.

On Wednesday, the Senate was engaged nearly all day with the North-eastern boundary question. In the House, Mr. Adams occupied the morning with the continuation of his speech on Texas. The Sub-treasury bill then came up. Messrs. Garland and Prentiss spoke against it, and Dromgoole in its favor.

On Thursday, memorials for and against the sub-treasury bill, were presented from Pennsylvania. Niles presented his instructions to vote against the Sub-treasury bill, from the Connecticut legislature, stating that he should not obey.

In the House, Mr. Adams continued his speech against Texas, and Mr. Prentiss against the Sub treasury bill, until the hour of adjournment.

Our correspondents must yet bear with us for the delay of their communications, we have been so much engaged with extra business the past week we have been unable to attend to them,—next week this will not be the case.

We would invite attention to the advertisement of the New York Mirror, which will be found in our columns this week. The first number of the sixteenth volume will be issued on Saturday, the 30th inst. and will contain a portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, and a Vignette title page. In the succeeding numbers will be given splendid steel engravings; and fifty pieces of beautiful and popular music. At only a limited number of copies are to be issued, those wishing to subscribe should do so immediately. For terms, see advertisement.

The Journal of the American Institute.—This is a most valuable periodical, which, though we have regularly received it, we have too long neglected noticing. It should be patronized by manufacturers and mechanics generally, and all who desire to promote American industry.

From the terms and recommendations we extract the following;

The Journal of this Institute is issued monthly —each number contains not less than 56 pages—price 84 per annum in advance. The October number commenced the third year. It notices the most important improvements of the day. An account of the patents is obtained monthly from the patent office at Washington.

It abounds with articles interesting to the agriculturist, the statesman, and political economist.

Recommendations from a number of the leading merchants, manufacturers, mechanics, and artists of New York:

"The Journal of the American Institute has been issued monthly for more than one year. We have perused the numbers—they embody as much useful information, in a compendious form as any publication in the country.

"The Journal is intended particularly for the benefit of manufacturers and mechanics—to them it looks for support; to the agriculturist, the statesman, and political economist, it is interesting and instructive. The work has now about seven hundred subscribers—it ought to have several thousands.

Subscriptions are received by T. B. Wakeman, at 187 Broadway, where there is a large hall continually open for the exhibition of models, machines, &c. without charge, to exhibitors or visitors.

FOREIGN.

The steam packet, Great Western, arrived in New York, on the morning of the 17th inst. in a passage of 14 days from Bristol. Her passage from New York to Bristol was also made in 14 days. The Sirius also arrived in New York, on the 18th, in 17 days from Cork. Her homeward passage was made in 20 days.

The Great Western brought 90 passengers, and 5000 letters. Postage, 25 cents each. Also over $200,000 in specie. The news received is 18 days later.

The accounts of the reception of the steam ships in New York, were received with much gratification in England, and were publicly responded to.

The cotton market remained firm in price, with a large amount of sales. Business was getting better, and money super-abundant, as ever. No political news of importance. Negro emancipation is yet the all-absorbing question, both in and out of Parliament.

A fatal riot occurred at Canterbury, on the 1st inst. which originated in a poor-law meeting—18 or 20 lives were lost. They have mobocracy in England as well as here it seems.

The arrangements for the queen's coronation are progressing rapidly.

The celebrated Talleyrand died suddenly, at Paris, on the 17th of May, in the 84th year of his age. He was attended by the King in his last moments, and retained his faculties to the last.

☞ The Great Western left New York on her return on Monday, (yesterday.) The Sirius by request of the merchants is detained until next week, that she may carry out the fate of the Sub-Treasury Bill.

The Fourth of July, which is now near at hand, is to be celebrated in several places in this vicinity. At Peapack, at the house of John Beck. At Long Beach, it is to be celebrated, "in such a manner, that not only the citizen and patriot, but the Christian may, with propriety, participate therein." On the contrary, in Rahway, horse racing is to be the order of the day.

The U. S. bank, it is said, intends opening a bank in Rochester and Buffalo, under the general banking law. The project is acceptable to the citizens of those places.

Smithsonian Legacy.—A letter from a friend in London informs us that the Hon. Richard Rush has obtained an absolute decree for the Smithsonian Bequest, and that the money has been paid to him. It amounts to upwards of a hundred thousand pounds sterling. Richard Rush was to have embarked on his return in the course of the present month, bringing with him the money thus bequeathed for the purpose of education in the United States. It was supposed that the matter would have been the cause of a tedious Chancery suit, but it appears from this intelligence that it has been terminated with very little delay.—Pennsylvanian.

A gentleman in Baltimore conversant with the recent transactions of the Treasury Department in the exchange of Treasury notes for Specie, authorizes us to state that the holders of specie in New York to the amount of one or two millions have preferred to invest it in Treasury Notes bearing 6 per cent interest, as exchange on England could not be sold at less than 9 1-2 premium which vanishs in a loss of 3 1-2 per cent on the importation. If Exchange should rise to 18, the precious metals will flow back as the cheapest remittance. All demands on the Treasury are now paid in Specie drafts.—Baltimore Patriot.

Valuable Discovery.—New Material for Paper.—This paragraph is written on paper made by L. Saunderson, paper manufacturer of Milton, from common beach grass, which grows abundantly on the sandy sea beach of Cape Cod and elsewhere. The grass is coarse and occasionally used to make a broom, but has never until now been applied to any other purpose. Indeed, it is considered a plant without use, as no animal will eat it. There are thousands of acres on Cape Cod, and an extensive bed of it at Lovell's Island in our harbor. The grass from which this paper is made was cut in the month of August. The paper is of a green olive color, but may be bleached quite white. It is very firm of texture, and more than equal to the average quality of wrapping paper. It can be used as letter paper, as it may be written on with facility, and does not absorb the ink. We shall try this evening, how it will answer to print on, and send copies to some of our contemporaries.—Bost. Transcript.

We have been informed that a road dog was shot yesterday in our town. As this is the season of the canine madness, persons who own dogs should regularly provide them food and water. This dreadful disease is frequently the result of want of proper attention to these animals.—Elizabethtown Jour.

We hope that every expectant to legislative preferment, of either party, was at the great military parade on Thursday last, and there formed an opinion whether a new organization of our militia system was not demanded. Before 11 o'clock we saw divers subjects "at ease" under the shadow of fences and trees, and so tired of training that they could no longer stand.

The whole of our militia laws are a burlesque and a disgrace to the State. Let them be wholly repealed or thoroughly re-organized, and thus banish from among us an excuse for men to convene for a drunken frolic from various sections of the country! Should any candidate for the Assembly decline to pledge himself for an alteration in the militia system at our next election he does not get our vote.—Jerseyman.

The Trenton Encampment.—Which is to take place on the second of next month, on the Revolutionary battle ground, promises to be, not only a large assemblage, but a brilliant and gratifying display of the citizen soldiery of the country. All the uniform companies in the State, will doubtless be represented there—Philadelphia is to contribute her quota; and the Baltimore papers say that the Maryland Cadets and the Baltimore City Guards, acting as a battalion, are to be on the ground.

The Committee of Arrangements, at Trenton, are doing their best to receive their visitors; but in order that ample accommodations may be provided for all, the committee should at once be apprized of the intention of all.—N. B. Fredonian.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page, which will be successively by three unsurpassed engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Bindings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others. The plan to publish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The Mirror will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original Poetry—Tales and Essays humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanics, &c. and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the ninth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of ESEX SANDERS, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Clapham, Maryatt, Sheridan, Neale, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanical execution, and the elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work ever sent forth has such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In its advertisements like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of entertainment, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country. —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay street, and one in Boston. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid steel engraved frontispiece, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Agues, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in creating the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.
Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, the best I have ever been acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints recommended especially for acres. I would wrong which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills are much liked, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness more than is necessary to operate, and will soon prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution in which more is at stake, or more depends to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservation of our free institutions. Patriotism as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we intend to make a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

Terms.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent unless subscription is received.

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Address 143 Nassau street.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. Between New York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They act with perfect safety to bind by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.—Their effects when taken according to the directions, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a dia charge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate he whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at this Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

Orphan's Court, of the Term of March, 1838.

UPON the application of Simeon F. Randolph and Jonathan F. Randolph, Executors of Barzilla F. Randolph, deceased, to this Court to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased shall bring in their debts, demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be forever barred of his or her action against the said executors, as ordered by the Court, That the said executors give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands, and claims against the said estate within twelve months from this time, by setting up such notice in five of the most public places in said county, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for the like space in one of the newspapers printed in this state, and if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim within the said period of twelve months after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be for ever barred of his or her action therefor against the said executors. ZABRISKIE, Clerk.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as there will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

THADEUS DAVID'S

WRITING FLUID,

A Substitute for Ink, for the Steel or Quill Pen.

THE superiority of this Fluid over common Inks, may be summed up under the following heads: The ease with which it flows from and follows the pen, the superior blackness which it acquires, the clearness with which it writes, its bright and distinct color when first written, and its drying so quickly, retaining its fluidity in all weathers, having no tendency to become sooty or muddy, never having any sediment; and lastly, its greater Durability, and its quality to resist the efforts and to obliterate the common inks, renders it particularly valuable for writing Bills of Exchange, Wills, Deeds, and also Log books as it cannot be impaired by Sea air.

PROSPECTUS
OF THE

New York Mirror,

A new volume to commence on the 2d of July next.

A POPULAR and highly esteemed Journal of elegant literature and the fine arts: embellished with numerous and costly engravings on steel, copper and wood —and rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c. and containing articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including original poetry—tales and essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—lively and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the actual drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, arts, mechanics, &c. &c.

The next volume of the New-York Mirror will exceed its predecessors on literary attractions, engravings, music and typography. The best writers in the land will contribute to its pages, and a spirited foreign correspondence will be maintained. The sum of $5000 will be paid for the original matter to be published in the course of the next volume! Besides which, choice translations from the French, German, Italian and Spanish; and Selections from popular journals abroad will serve to give variety, and render it one of the most piquant, fascinating and exquisite repositories of elegant literature and the fine arts extant.

Its Literary Character.—Whatever may have been the attractions of the thirteen preceding volumes of the New York Mirror, the arrangements entered into and consummated for the fourteenth, the first number of which will be published on the second of July next, warrant us in the pledge that, in every respect, but particularly in the literary department, it will greatly surpass all its predecessors, fully maintaining its pre-eminent position among the periodicals of the country, and offering a successful rivalry with the most vaunted popular periodicals of the British and Parisian press.

Its Steel Engravings.—The most distinguished artists have been employed to furnish designs and execute the beautiful series of pictorial embellishments, illustrative of American scenery, incidents, and personages.

CONDITIONS.

It is published every Saturday, at the corner of Ann and Nassau sts. Elegantly printed in the quarto form on beautiful paper. It is embellished with splendid engravings, and every week with a popular piece of music. Terms.—Five dollars per annum, payable in advance. No subscriptions received for a less term than one year.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

BY MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of the work out of the hands of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—his well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Sudent will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

And in the debate already referred to, Mr. Hamilton one of the reformers, in speaking of payment for the services of the press, observed; "When the Government becomes the paymaster for these services, the evil is infinitely augmented. For, what are the services which the press under such circumstances is expected to render as a return for the partial kindness of the Government? Why, to cover all their approaches to arbitrary power; to defend each measure of misrule and corruption; to find excuses and apologies for every act of imbecility, although the interest and honor of the country may be jeopardod by ignorance, apathy, or neglect; but, above all, to subject those who do not think 'the existing powers entitled to the confidence of the People to the most unsparing calumny and abuse.'" Mr. Bond said he would appeal to the House and to the country if we are not now experiencing daily the practical application of what Mr. Hamilton mentioned as a possible state of things. Is not his description of a subsidized press in the hands of the Government so graphically true of the present administration and its press that it might justly be conjectured that they sat for the picture? Every day's experience shows that all who oppose the present Administration are 'subjected to the most unsparing calumny and abuse.' Another of the Jackson reformers of the House, Mr. Floyd, of Virginia, observed in debate here, that "the Executive influence in this Government was very great, and had been exerted to calumniate members in this House as well as great and wise men out of the House." He said "it had been attempted to cut them off by dark inuendoes," and that "hireling scribblers had been paid directly or indirectly for performing the task."

Mr. Speaker, have we not felt and seen the sad reality of all this for the last nine years, but more particularly since Mr. Van Buren undertook "the improvement of the press," and a display of its liberality-power in the hired columns of the Globe? Who has not been disgusted with the coarse and "unsparing calumny" from day to day poured out upon members of Congress, and of the Senate in particular, who happened to think that "the existing powers were not entitled to the confidence of the People?" Who has not seen the attempt of the Government press to break down the influence and power of "members of Congress," and to cut them off by hireling scribblers, paid directly or indirectly for performing the task? Does not the Globe constantly charge Mr. Clay, Mr. Webster, Mr. Southard and other Senators, as being paid by and under the influence of the Bank of the United States when engaged in the discharge of their high constitutional duties?" And when these foul slanders are howled from the throat of the 'staunch mastiff,' at the door of the Treasury, do not the whole kennel, Cry, Blanche, and Sweetheart, little dogs and all," even to the "most starveling turnspit that barks on the farthest verge of our frontiers," re-echo the sound? The Jackson reformer, Mr. Floyd, spoke of the slanders on members of Congress and on other men elsewhere. Why, sir, we daily experience that and more. The President and his press have gone on from time to time calumniating members of Congress and others, individuals, and at length have got to slandering the people in a body—a kind of wholesale slander business. If a Congressional district, in the free exercise of its constitutional right, elect a member who will not "bow and do obedience to the party," he is at once proclaimed to be the head attorney of the bank, and the people of the district are stigmatized as "reprieved debtors."

Here, sir, I desire to read a short paragraph from the President's official paper—the Globe. It was printed a year since, and then met my eye. I have preserved it for the express purpose of noticing it here on a suitable occasion; and this is the first appropriate moment I have had to do so. The paragraph in question was written on the occasion of announcing the election of one of the present Senators from Ohio, (Mr. Allen) in doing which, the Globe exults at which it was pleased to consider a defeat of Mr. Ewing, a highly distinguished and most valuable member of the Senate. I do not propose to dwell on hat election: it is foreign to my purpose: but I do believe it was achieved against the wishes of majority of the people of Ohio, and recent events sustain that opinion. And yet, this man, whom the people of Ohio, delighted, and, if the signs of the times do not deceive, will again "delight to honor," is, at the moment of his retiring from the Senate to the bosom of his family, and to all the private relations of life, held up and stigmatized in the Globe as a "bank beneficiary."

In the same article, sir, some fifteen Senators are opprobriously named and contemned by this Government press. The State of Alabama is particularly congratulated on being relieved from the "Calhounery" of Gabriel Moore. But now a new light has suddenly opened which wholly changes the medium through which the Globe sees "Calhounery" to use Mr. Blair's own phrase. How long has it been since that paper stigmatized Mr. Calhoun "as the bank's feed instrument," and said of him "that no man nullified the truth with so little remorse?" Now, however, the whole scene is changed and Mr. Calhoun is almost deified by the Government press which but yesterday had so reviled him! Has, Mr. Speaker, we realize another truth spread before the country in Mr. Benton's report, which, in describing the power of the President over individuals administering the Government, says: "He makes and unmakes them." A short time since, this Administration and its press stood forth the advocates and friends of the State banks, and after placing the public money in their custody, urged them to lend it out. Having thus "debauched" and seduced them from the "even tenor of their way," this same Administration and press now abuse the banks and the credit system which but yesterday they applauded; and to justify this abuse falsehood is substituted for fact. The Globe a day or two since stated "that the Legislative examination in Ohio proved "that the directors of the banks there had drawn out more than the whole amount of their real capital." This, sir, is another daring and impudent falsehood of that paper, and furnishes additional evidence of the desperation of this Administration and its "Government press," in carrying out the sub-Treasury system, with all its selfish purposes. The result of the "Legislative examination of the banks in Ohio" is fully reported by the Auditor of the State, who is a thorough going disciple of the sub-Treasury school. His report is now before me and I invite its immediate inspection. It is most creditable to the banks of Ohio; shows them to have been prudently managed, and that they will not suffer in comparison with those of any state in the Union. But let us look into the Auditors report, and test the truth of the fact stated by the Globe "that the directors of the banks in Ohio had drawn out more than the amount of their real capital." By the Auditor's report, it appears that the amount of capital stock actually paid in these banks in December last was $11,321,218 while the whole amount loaned to directors and stockholders together, at that time, was only $1,466,174, 56. I leave it for others to apply the proper remedies to the Globe for its slander of the banks and the people of Ohio; but, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you and to this House if a press which is thus basely conducted, should be sustained and cherished by funds from the public Treasury?

This same paper took occasion, not long since, to quote from some remarks which I had the honor to make in the House, and to say it had never intimated that the Senate was a useless body. Why, Sir, the gross calumny heaped by the Globe on the majority of the Senate, but a short time since, must be familiar to all. I will not offend so far as to read those slanders to the House. The official organ, by its personal abuse of the Senators, and repeated calumny of the body did more than give the intimation alluded to. Did not the Globe say of the Senate that "its dignity" was "impaired"—"its character for grave consideration gone"—that "its justice" was "doubted," and its power to harm by its most marked censure "contemned and derided?" Yes, sir, this was the language held by the President's official press towards the American Senate, and yet that same press now has the effrontry to deny that it ever intimated that the Senate was a useless body.

But Mr. Speaker, in pursuing the individual slanders of the Globe, I have digressed a little from my purpose to show that the Government press also does a "wholesale slander business," and throws its poisoned shafts at masses of men—yes, sir, at the great body of the People themselves. I beg leave now to read that part of the article from the Government press which I before alluded to, announcing the result of the Senatorial election then recently held in Ohio. Referring to the district which I have the honor to represent in this body, the President's official organ says:

"The bank held immense power in his [my] district, and exercised a powerful influence in aid of the Federal party which has stronger hold in that quarter than in any other part of Ohio. It succeeded by a small majority in electing Mr. Bond, the collector of its bonds there. He may be looked on as the representative of reprieved debtors."

After the vile slanders which the Government press has wantonly heaped upon many of the most eminent and justly distinguished public men of the country, Mr. Bond said an honest individual like himself should not complain, but rather feel honored that he was thus noticed. For himself, personally, he would say nothing; but for his district—his constituents—for the People, who had honored him with their confidence, and made him their representative here, he had much to say. He could not perhaps express all the just indignation that he felt; my constituents sir, (said Mr. Bond,) in every trait of character which can justly ennoble man, are not inferior to those of any member in this House. With God's mercy, and their own right arm, they have been the builders of their own fortunes. In every sense, they are virtuous, intelligent, and independent freemen—"who know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain them." They love their country, and revere its Constitution; but they have never yet "bowed the knee to Baal;" and because they will not, the editor of this vile press, bloated and swollen with Government patronage, stigmatized them as "reprieved debtors." Mr. Speaker, should this "hired scribbler," Francis P. Blair, ever venture into that district, I do not believe that the people whom he has thus basely slandered, would consent to defile their hands by touching him; but they would cast upon him a scornful and withering look of honest and just indignation, which would give to his visage a more cadaverous aspect than it even now has. But who is this man who thus impudently arrays himself against the People? Why, sir, he is himself a "reprieved debtor" of the very bank which he is ever ready to revile. Do gentlemen require proof? The files of this House furnish it. A paper reported or filed by one of the committees of this House shows that this same Francis P. Blair, who was brought here from Frankfort, in the State of Kentucky, owed the Bank of the United States the sum of $20,744 36. It is true that only a part of this sum was his own debt; nevertheless, on his own account, and as security for others, he was indebted to that bank on the 30th day of November, 1830, for the whole amount of the sum which I have mentioned. Did he pay it? No, sir. Does he yet owe it? No, sir. How was he discharged? He compromised, if the terms on which he was released are justly entitled to be called a compromise. What were those terms? Why he had a clerk's fee bill, amounting to $37 42, and a note on a gentleman by the name of Gratz for $200, say together, $237 42, which he gave up to the bank, and was released from $20,744 36! Now, sir, I think Francis P. Blair may justly be called a "reprieved debtor."

The report alleged that abuse had "taken place from the various and arbitrary manner in which members estimated their mileage. This abuse was ascertained to have been practised by the reformers themselves; and they have continued the practice without any restraint. I will give you, sir, an illustration, which may not be thought inappropriate. In the days of promised reform, the two Senators from the state of Missouri differed in politics; one of them the great reformer, Mr. Benton; the other, Mr. Barton, who thought the promised reform was a mere humbug. The first session of the twentieth Congress commenced the 3d of December, 1827, and ended on the 26th of May 1828. These gentlemen severally attended the whole session; their per diem allowance was $1,400 each, being 175 days, at $8 per day; but for mileage, reckoning $8 for every twenty miles, Mr. Barton charged $939 20, whilst Mr. Benton charged $1,344 66. Mr. Barton charged his mileage by the great mail route over land; but Mr. Benton who was railing out and condemning all abuses, counting his miles by all the crooks and turns and tortuous windings of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers! Mr. Barton was left at home because he did not believe the propriety of professing one thing and practising another; and Mr. Benton was retained to correct abuses and carry out the great principles of his report on executive patronage. Ten years have intervened since the session of Congress just referred to; the report sleeps unheeded, and in the mean time Mr. Benton continues to count his miles every year by the way of the river, which has given him $4,000 more than Mr. Barton felt authorized to charge under the same law.

Another precept.—The committee reported that the privilege of newspapers to the members ought to be abrogated;" and "that the practice too often indulged in by the House of voting to themselves copies of books," ought to be discontinued. The privilege and practice continue, and without restraint.

Precept.—The contingent expenses of this House were reported to be extravagant. During the year 1838, the last of Mr. Adam's Administration, they amounted to $80 000.

Practice.—During the year 1836, the last year of the Jackson reform Administration, this item was 200,000! And, during the year 1837, being the first year of the "successor," who promised to "tread in the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor," these expenses are $210,000! This must be the "magician's way" of working in the rule of reduction—it was certainly unknown to old Thomas Dilworth.

* * * *

Let us next compare the Navy Department. Mr. Southard who was Secretary of the Navy in 1828, employed 7 clerks, besides the chief clerk. The salary of the Secretary, and the compensation of the clerks and messengers, amounted to 17,250. The Department has been held for many years, and is still managed by Mr. Dickenson, who was a member of the committee in the Senate, from whom came that famous report on Executive patronage, to which I first referred. He employs eight clerks besides the chief clerk; and his salary with the compensation of his clerks and messengers amounts to 18,850. And at this very session, he demands more clerks, and an increase in the salary of some of those he already has.

The committee censure Secretary Southard for unnecessary expenses in subscription for newspapers for the Department. They specify under this head, 624 43 for three years. It now appears that Secretary Dickerson has expended, for newspapers and the miscellaneous books and literature of the times, in 1 year near 709; and including similar expenses of the Navy Board near 950.

The committee also condemn the practice of extra clerk hire. We find Mr. Dickerson not only employing three extra clerks, but what is far more dangerous paying extra hire to one of the regular clerks in the Department, enjoying at the time, a salary of 2,700, but to whom is paid, for extra services as clerk, the further sum of 429 67, making his salary 2,129 67. Is not this a ready mode of providing for a favorite?

The committee also specify, the sum of 466 86, as paid by the Navy Department, in three years, for printing and condemn it as extravagant.

The Blue Book of 1837 shows the Navy Department under the reformer, Mr. Dickerson, to have paid 9,557 22 for printing in 2 years!

The committee also reported that a considerable sum varying from 100 to 500 was annually expended by the Secretary of the Navy in the purchase of books for his office most of them having no appropriate relation to the naval service of the country, such as reviews, magazines, and other periodical publications, and the fashionable literature of the day. This thing is—still work it up I know.—

By this time, I think it is apparent that the duty devolves on the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Cambreleng) not only to account for his voting against the measure in regard to the compensation of members but also why it is that a judicious system of reform has not been instituted by his friends, the Executive officers themselves, whereby the country might realize what was promised by the gentlemen's report—a reduction of one third of the number of clerks in the several Departments, with safety to the public interest.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From Dr. Fisk's Travels.

Crossing the Alps.—It was first spoken of as a matter of regret by our party that we had to pass the mountains in the winter, as the scenery, it was supposed, would be much more interesting in the summer. But we had occasion afterward to doubt the propriety of that regret. A mountain passage like this assures at any time more of the sublime than beautiful; and winter with its fleecy clouds wreathed around the mountain top, with his white mantle of sleet covering the broad shoulders of the giant hills and congealing into belts of silver, studded with pearl, the numerous rivulets and cascades that wind round and fall down their hoary sides, gives to the natural exhibition a heightened sublimity; and when the winter scene is rendered peculiar as in the present instance, by the hoar frost already alluded to, it is not only grand but gorgeous. It was this combination of circumstances that heightened the general effect of the present passage.

But in addition, there was a peculiar occurrence which gave a most splendid feature to the scene—an aerial exhibition which I can never describe so as to give a mere reader any adequate conception of it; but I will attempt a sketch of some of its principal parts.

The heavy veil of rack and mist which was spread out upon the mountains and associated gloom and obscurity with the other characteristics of sublimity. This mist, however, as it afterward appeared, only extended part way up the mountains; for a rent in the curtain disclosed, as thro' a window, far, far upward in the blue ether, the silver turrets of the mountain top, throwing back the bright beams of a cloudless sun. The mountain was high, very high; but the apparent height was doubtless magnified by the narrowness of the aperture and by the darkness of the foreground contrasted with the intense light of the distant prospect. The world around us was indeed a world of shadows, but that world of which we gained a distant glimpse was one of unearthly brightness. It seemed like a sight of the most excellent glory—a distant yet bright vision of the "House of our Father above,

The place of angels and of God."

We watched for some time this splendid palace of the skies, and the shifting of the misty veil without closing up the aperture served but to give new aspects to the celestial vision. At one time it hung in festoons around the cylinder of light, and at another it shot upward in a twisted wreath around the outbeaming glory, exhibiting a spiral column of light and shade.

I have often read descriptions of that heavenly city whose walls are of jasper, whose streets are of gold, and whose gates are of pearl, and whose heavenly turrets throw back the glory of God and the Lamb. But of this I never had so vivid a conception as now flashed upon my mind, and kindled upon my imagination! It is all but reality! It is the up per world!

We happened to stop in a store a day or two since, where an individual was reading from the Gazette, as a matter of course, an account of the submarine armor company in New York. When he had finished, a perfect hoosier standing by remarked, "Them are people is certainly foolish to risk their lives in the submarine thing, when they might git up what they want much easier." Knowing that the greatest discoveries are sometimes made in strange ways, we asked him 'How so?' when we were answered, "Why, jist by throwing a few Brandreth's pills where they guess any thing is—it'll work it up I know.—

General Harrison's Opinions on Dueling.

From the Trenton State Gazette.

Trenton N. J. March, 15, 1838.

Dear Sir—The history of statesmen and heroes presents a vestage of feudal times, of which some of the placemen have availed themselves to tarnish the lustre of their valorous achievements, whenever reason could not decide the contest. From a nations escutcheon the mark of dishonor should be effaced, that the true honor, or which is the watchword of the chivalrous and brave, in national defence, be sustained by public opinion and illustrious examples. Various are the paths in which honor is pursued. Some "pluck bright honor from the pale-faced moon," while others court "in the imminent deadly breech," and others again wear the laurel who point against their friends the burnished fire-lock in personal combat. While the National Legislature debates the point called honor, and the eminent men there embodied, called forth the ponderous influence of their talents on a subject so eventful in settling the views of statesmen, I had thought that your long experience as a statesman and soldier, and particularly from your connection with the north-western army, ample evidence might be furnished in concurrence with theirs, for the amelioration of our countrymen, on a point which is sometimes at least no honorable point—that misc-called honor. Contemplating the conformity of some reminiscences of your eventful life, to illustrate this subject for the benefit of my fellow citizens, I therefore respectfully request your opinion of the code of honor which decides controversies by a resort to the duel.

Most respectfully yours,

AARON B. HOWELL.

Gen. W. H. Harrison.

North Bend, 7th April, 1838.

Dear Sir—You ask my opinion "of the code of honor which decides controversies by a resort to the duel." I comply with your request, and would do so more readily, if I could suppose that any thing I could say would have any influence in putting an end to a practice which is the cause of so much individual distress, and violates so many obligations of the most sacred character.

The arguments which may be used against dueling are so obvious, and have been so often urged by persons much more able to do them justice than I am, that I shall content myself with saying you what may be termed my experience in matters of this kind. And as this certainly does not exhibit the practice in a very fascinating light, it may perhaps have a better effect than any other mode of treating the subject that I could adopt.

I believe that there were more duels in the north western army, between the years 1794 and 1796, during a less number of years and the same length of time and among so small a body of men as composed the commissioned officers of the army, either in America, or any other country, at least in modern times. I became an officer in the first mentioned year, at so early an age, that it is not wonderful that I implicitly adopted the opinions of the older officers, most of whom were veterans of the Revolution, upon this as well as upon every thing connected with my conduct and duty in the profession which I had chosen. I believed, therefore, in common with the larger portion of the officers, that no brave man would decline a challenge, nor refrain from giving one, whenever he considered that his rights or feelings had been trespassed upon. I must confess too, that I was not altogether free from the opinion, that even honor might be acquired by a well-fought duel. Fortunately, however, before I was engaged in a duel, either as principal or second, I became convinced that all my opinions on the subject were founded in error, and none of them more so than that which depicted the situation of the successful duelist, as either honorable or desirable. If could not be honorable, because the greater portion of that class of mankind whose good opinion or an individual confers honor upon him, were opposed to it. And I had the most evidence to believe that, in the grave of the fallen duellist, was frequently buried the peace and happiness of the survivor; the act which deprived the one of existence, planted a thorn in the bosom of the other, which would continue to rankle and fester there to the end of his days. The conviction that such was the case with men of good feelings and principles, was produced by my witnessing the mental sufferings of an intimate friend, and bosom friend, by whose hand a worthy man had fallen. Several years had elapsed from the date of this affair, before I became acquainted with him. We were soon after associated in the general staff of the army, and for the greater part of two years, we shared the same tent or struck room, and often the same pallet. I had therefore an opportunity of seeing the agony he felt, when his mind recurred to the event which had deprived society of a worthy member, and himself of an esteemed friend and acquaintance. Like the unhappy hermit in the tragedy of Douglass, he appeared, in his sleep, to "hold dialogues" with the ghost of the victim of his superior skill in the use of arms, or more perfect self possession; and a witness to them might have adopted the opinion of the Youthful Norval that the happy lot was his who had fallen. Taking the rules which govern such matters, as the criterion, my friend had nothing wherewith to accuse himself. The quarrel was indeed "thrust upon him." Generous as brave, he had done every thing in his power to induce a withdrawal of the challenge, and when, by a first fire his adversary was wounded, he anxiously desired that the affair might terminate. His proposition rejected, his second shot was fatal. What an instructive lesson does this story present to him who would resort to this mode of settling a personal difficulty; and who possesses common sensibility and the principles of humanity and honor. The sad alternatives, his own death, or a subsequent life of bitter regret and sorrow. A short experience in the army convinced me, also, that fighting a duel was not an undoubted test of true courage. I had known instances of duels, and desperate duels, being fought by men who would not have been selected by the officers who knew them, to lead a forlorn hope. On the contrary, I possessed the most positive testimony to prove, that some of the bravest of men would not be engaged in an affair of that kind under any circumstances.

Conformably to my plan, as stated in the commencement of my letter, to give you facts rather than arguments, I present you with another reminiscence of my early military life. I introduce it not only to maintain my position, but from the respect I entertain, for the memory of a gallant brother officer, long since called to receive, in another world, his reward for having preferred "the praise of God to the praise of men." In the summer of the year of 1793, Lieut. Drake, of the infantry of the 2d sub-legion, received a marked insult from another officer. Manifesting no disposition to call him to account, some of those who wished him well, among whom I was one, spoke to him on the subject expressing our fears that his reputation as an officer would greatly suffer, if he permitted such an insult to pass unnoticed. The answer he gave me was, that he cared not what opinion the officers might form of him; he was determined to pursue his own course. This course was so novel in the army that it lost him, as I had supposed it would, the respect of nearly all the officers. The ensuing summer, however, gave Mr. Drake an opportunity of vindicating, most triumphantly, his conduct and principles. He had been stationed in a small fortress which had been erected by Gen. Wayne, during the winter, upon the spot which had been rendered remarkable, by the defeat of Gen. St. Clair's army, the year before. The garrison consisted of a single rifle company, and thirty infantry, and of the latter Drake was the immediate commander. In the beginning of July 1794, a detachment of the army, consisting of several hundred men, under the command of Maj. McMahon, being encamped near the fort, in which they had the previous day deposited a quantity of provisions which they had escorted from the cantonment of the army at Greenville, were attacked early in the morning, by upwards of three thousand Indians. The troops made a gallant resistance, but being turned on both flanks, and in danger of being surrounded, they retreated to the open ground around the fort. From, this too, they were soon dislodged by the overpowering force of the enemy; in the retreat many wounded men were in danger of being left which being observed from the fort, the commandant Capt. Gibson, directed his own Lieut. to take the infantry [Drake's particular command] and a portion of the rifle-men, to the relief of their retreating troops and the enemy ceased upon them a hot fire; arrested their advance, and gave an opportunity to the wounded to effect their escape, and to the broken and retreating companies of our troops to re-form and again to face the enemy. Throughout the whole affair Drake's activity, skill and extraordinary self possession, were most conspicuous. The enemy, of course, observed it as well as his friends. The numerous shots directed at him, however, in the course of the conflict, aimed in the heart of Hector, were turned aside by Providential interference, until he had accomplished all that he had been sent to perform. He then received a ball thro' his body and fell; a faithful corporal came to his assistance, and with his aid he reached the fort; and those too were the last of the retreating party that entered it, Drake making it a point of honor that it should be so. Mr. Drake never fully recovered from the wound he got by which time by his wound. He had not, indeed, recovered from it, in the summer of 1796, when he was my guest, when in command of Fort Washington, (Cincinnati) on his way on furlough, to visit his native State Connecticut. His friends, however, enjoyed his presence but a short time; having, as I understood, taken the yellow fever, in passing through Philadelphia, he died in a few days after he reached his home.

I have yet another reminiscence, the relation of which may serve the cause you have so much at heart.

An Officer of the Army had so often and so unnecessarily wounded the feelings of another of the same corps, the duties of which made their associations indispensible, that he considered it his duty to demand satisfaction in the usual way. They met, and the injured man fell, receiving a mortal wound, and it was anticipated he would, from the superior skill of his antagonist in the use of the weapon which they used. Being possessed of a high grade of talents and an amiable character, he had the sympathy of all the officers. With others I visited him, after he had been removed to his quarters. He expressed a desire to see the officer with whom he had fought and I was present at the interview. I wish I could describe, as it merited, the interesting and the circumstances attending it were so deeply impressed upon my mind that they can never be effaced, as long as memory holds its seat.

In the tent, were some half dozen officers, the friends of the dying man, (for, as I have said, he had, from his amiable qualities, many and warm ones,) exhibiting unequivocal evidence of their sorrow. Conspicuous above the rest, and near the head of the rude couch, was the manly form of the Commandant of the Corps, to which both the duellists belonged, (the true ideal of chivalrous valor and the chevalier de Bayard of the army,) endeavoring to stifle as best he could, the feelings which agitated his bosom. At a little distance, and in full view of the victim of his passions, sat the insensible——; but I must restrain the indignation which I still feel. He was my brother officer; we shared together the perils of a difficult war; and, in battle I know that he did his duty, and, whatever might have been his faults, to others, I never had personally any reason to complain of him. But there he sat apparently, at least, unaffected by the mischief he had done, by burying in an untimely grave, a man who had never injured him, whose arm might be needed in the pending decisive battle with the hitherto triumphant enemies of his country, and whose intellect might at some future time have been employed in its councils. The severe bodily pain which the dying officer had for some time suffered, had ceased; and that calm and ease had succeeded, which is the unequivocal harbinger of approaching death, and which a gracious Providence has provided for the mortally wounded soldier, to enable him to offer a last prayer for his distant family, if he has one, or for the pardon of his own sins. Turning his intelligent eye upon his late antagonist, he mildly said that "he had desired to see him, for the purpose of assuring him of his sincere forgiveness; that he wished him happiness in this world; and that, as the means of securing it, he recommended to him with the sincerity of a dying man, to endeavor to restrain the violence of his passions, the indulgence of which had deprived one of life who had never injured him in thought or deed."

I am satisfied that what I have said above, does not entirely meet your inquiry, and that you will expect me to state what effect on the scenes I have described, had in forming my own principles and governing my own conduct. I have already stated an entire change in my sentiments on the subject of duelling, from those which I entertained upon my first entering the army: and for which no excuse can be offered, but my extreme youth, and the bad examples continually before me. In almost every other case, possessed of the deliberate opinions of a man, you might safely conclude that his conduct would be in conformity with them. But such alas! is not the case with men of the world, in relation to the laws which form "the code of honor" Abstractedly considered, they all condemn them, while in practice they adopt them. In all other cases, independent men act from their own convictions, but, in this case, upon the opinions of others, or rather from what they fear may be the opinions of others. I acknowledge then, that the change of my opinions, which I have admitted in relation to dueling had no other influence on my conduct than to determine me never to be the aggressor. But, although resolved to offer no insult nor inflict any injury, I was determined to suffer none.—When I left the army, however, and retired to civil life, I considered myself authorized greatly to narrow the ground upon which I would be willing to resort to a personal combat. To the determination which I had previously made, to offer no insult nor inflict any injury to give occasion to any one to call upon me in this way, (for after witnessing the scene which I have last described, the wealth and honors of the world would not have tempted me point a pistol at the breast of a man I had injured,) I resolved to disregard all remarks upon my conduct which could not be constructed into a deliberate insult, or any injury which did not affect my reputation or the happiness and peace of my family. When I had the honor to be called upon to command the North Western Army, recollecting the number of gallant men that had fallen in the former war, in personal combat, I determined to use all the authority and all the influence of my station to prevent their recurrence. And, to take away the principal source from which they spring, in an address to the Pennsylvania brigade, at Sandusky, I declared it to be my determination to prevent by all the means that the military laws placed in my hands would enable me, to give even the insult so offered, by the superior to the inferior officers. I cannot say what influence this course, upon my part, may have produced in the result. But I state, with pleasure, that there was not a single duel, nor, as far as I know, a challenge given, while I remained in the command. The activity in which the army was constantly kept, may, however, have been the principal cause of this uncommon harmony.

In relation to my present sentiments, a sense of higher obligations than human laws, or human opinions, can impose, has determined me never, on any occasion, to accept a challenge or seek redress for a personal injury, by a resort to the laws which compose the code of honor.

I am, very respectfully, your fellow citizen,

W. H. HARRISON.

Hints to Young People.—No. 6.

My last number contained hints on the subject of energy of character. This is the opposite of a languid, passive sort of life. Some men appear to glide or rather roll and tumble along, through the narrow channel of their business, under just such impulses as happen to strike them, using neither force nor skill to direct their course.

When we speak of energy in business, it will be seen that we do not mean a mere bustling activity. A man may as well be idle as to drive his trade or profession, unless he drive it prudently and in the proper direction. You see here and there a man who make much about little business talks loud about private affairs; makes large, and pompous motions about small things; and seems to wish to be reputed a man of business on a large scale. Such men are generally understood to accomplish little. Their business is commonly an empty concern, and like the drum or the cart rattling over a pavement, their emptiness makes them the more noisy.

Some young men may think it a sign of energy or activity to rove about from place to place for the sake of change, or to see the world, even when they leave a steady and profitable employment in one place. They have a peculiar fancy for dancing and roving. A disposition of this sort is often not far from dissipation and prodigality of time and money. If a young man has honorable and profitable employment in one place, he will show no want of enterprise and spirit by keeping himself to his business. Change of place takes time and money, and unless he secures enough more of profit to pay the expense, he is a loser.

On the other hand, there is a great and unfortunate lack of energy in a young man who contents himself with a small and single chance of employment, and suffers himself to be upon his employer half his time perhaps, rather than make resolute efforts to furnish himself with business that may occupy and improve all his time. Another instance of the same defect appears in the young man, who throws himself solely on the kindness of friends, and depends on them to seek places for him, to introduce him, and to shape his whole business and fortune.—Such a spirit commonly proves a miserable incumbrance. The help it depends on is transient and when the man comes to the crisis when he must help himself, he finds himself as spiritless as when he began. Let every young man act on the principles of helping himself by the kindness of Providence, whenever he can.—His own efforts will prove the double benefit, of working for him a useful experience and of yielding him, in many cases, the most effectual aid.

COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

As you publish an independent paper you may with propriety become a corrector of the public morals in so far as the press can operate against gambling and horse racing. You will perceive by the Camden Mail that the gambling establishment in that vicinity rents for nearly two hundred dollars per day, during the racing season, and that the proprietor receives fifteen hundred dollars for the two racing terms of each year. At Trenton is a similar establishment. This should be remedied by the people, but it cannot be effected while legislators are rather chosen for their knowledge of horsemanship, than their acquaintance with the rights of the people. A Jackson Legislature repealed the penal section of the act against horse-racing, but a Whig Legislature improved upon it, by appointing the Secretary of the Jocky Club the engrossing clerk of the last Legislature. Let the parties divide the honor of improving our morals between them.

Mr. Editor:

Exaggerated or fictitious anecdotes, spiced with pleasantry, that are not calculated to make false impressions, may pass with impunity the bar of public opinion. But such as are spiced with ill-will, and calculated to make false impressions, should be condemned at the same bar and punished with public scorn. Of the character of the latter, I find an anecdote under the caption "The Difference," in the last Union. I assume the responsibility of saying that such a circumstance never took place; or, if it ever did, the preacher was either ignorant of Arminianism or was no Arminian. If he was ignorant of Arminianism, did the Calvinist alluded to, or the editor of the Hartford Watchman act the part of Christians when they took his misrepresentations and palmed them off on the public as the true doctrine of Arminius? But if may be said that they too, like the Arminian preacher, might have been ignorant of Arminianism. This is not very likely, for Calvanist preachers and editors of the land of "the Pilgrims," are not men of this stamp. If he were not ignorant of Arminianism, he was no Arminian; and if no Arminian, they must have known it. Let me then ask the question again, did they act the part of Christians when they reported him to be an Arminian preacher when he was not?

The points which are so glaringly false, and which contain such palpable misrepresentations of the doctrines of Arminius, are the following, 1st. Making works the foundation of a sinner's salvation, and grace the top: 2nd, making works the tree and grace the fruits: and then drawing the conclusion from premises which they knew to be false, that his house was built bottom upwards. To show that Arminius held no such sentiments, I will make one quotation from his doctrines:—"This divine grace or energy of the Holy Ghost begins and perfects every thing that can be called good in man, and consequently all good works are to be attributed to God alone." Persons disbelieving this are ardently requested to produce from the writings of Arminius any thing like that palmed upon him in the anecdote.

The editor of the Union will, inasmuch as he gave publicity to the anecdote, please give publicity to this communication, by the doing of which he will confer a favor upon

Mr. Editor:

As I do not feel much in the writing mood, to-day, I will send you a few extracts from a letter I have just received from my cousin Richard, which will do better than any thing I can write at present. Dick is a strange mortal, with many singular notions, but a right good fellow withal.

Hardscrabble, June 30th. P. S.

Dear Peter:

* * The blue rains and cold weather of the spring blasted all my expectations, if you will allow me so strong an expression. They kept me within doors, the greater part of the time, grumbling at every thing, and every body, and reduced me to a state that could find no amusement or satisfaction except in smoking. Glorious narcotic! immortal tobacco! Without ed the arm that would strike one star from the constellation of thy virtues. Sovereign remedy for all the ills that flesh is heir to! May his breast never know that peace which thou canst give, who would stigmatise thee as useless and vile.

* * * * *

And then the ladies—what can be compared to them? Yes, even tobacco must yield the victory. I know not why it is, but I cannot feel cross or snarl when I inhale the same atmosphere that animates the young, the fair and beautiful of the other sex. The demon that reigned before, now leaves his throne and hides his miscreated head. I feel as if I were in another world, among the scenes of fabled Elysium.

I do not always wish to talk. Words addressed to me, strike discordant upon the ear, at times. I wish frequently to set in some retired part of the room, and gaze and listen without joining the gay assemblage, to admire youth and beauty as it floats about me, with all the lightness and buoyancy of happy hearts,—to hear the merry laugh as it breaks from the rosy lips of an innocent girl. This is bliss—it is pleasure unalloyed. For I cannot like some would-be philosophers, destroy all my happiness, and turn this "milk of human kindness" into gall, by moralizing upon the frailty of these bright creatures, and forcing upon my mind the thought that they may soon—very soon be cold beneath the clods of the valley, I have no fellow feeling with such cynics. Is not human life chequered with woes enough, without embittering our happiest moments with dark foreboding? Man should undoubtedly remember his "latter end." He should be so convinced of the certainty of death, and the vanity of all sublunary things, that he will prepare for his exit from this world, and place his "treasure where moth doth not corrupt." To do this is both his duty and his happiness. I only complain of that moroseness which never looks upon mirth but with a scowl.

Barnus, you recollect, when writing to a young friend, said in reference to what he might indite,

"Perhaps it may turn out a song,
Perhaps turn out a sermon,"

Now I should as soon have thought of writing a song, as a sermon, when I commenced. I had many things to say, but here I am at the bottom of the third page, and yet nothing is written but some vagaries of my idle fancy. But it is before breakfast, and you know when the stomach wants its ballast, topsails and sky-scrapers play the mischief with one's "light bark." Yours, &c.

Richard Snarl.

Travelling in New Jersey.—Some estimate may be formed of what railroads and good stages are doing for this State, by the fact that forty passengers passed through Morriston from Easton on Saturday, in three stages, and on Monday one of the cars from this place arrived at Newark with ninety passengers.—Democratic Banner.

The silk culture is now successfully prosecuted in various parts of New Jersey, to a very considerable extent. Burlington county seems to be taking the lead: Monmouth is close behind; and Warren embraces several enterprises of the kind. In this vicinity several public spirited gentlemen are engaged in raising the mulberry tree, which we are happy to learn is completely successful.—Fredonian.

Something Extraordinary.—The New York Journal of Commerce contains the following: "One of the Journal of Commerce forms, being encased in a box, fell yesterday from the fifth story of the Phoenix buildings into the basement cellar, and through the cellar floor partly into the ground without displacing a type! Depth of the fall, about 50 feet. The box was pretty well shattered, the chase and column rules bent, and the quoins on one page all loosened, so that they could be taken out with the fingers; but the type all remained in their places. The weight of the form is about 350 lbs.

A Melancholy Reflection.—An old bachelor, a friend of ours in the country, tells us of the addition of several little ones to the families of his brothers and sisters, and thus muses upon his forlorn condition—"I feel like a post set up in the middle of an orchard; the young shoots are starting up all around me, but no young posts.—Louisville Journal.

There were 94 deaths in New York last week: consumption 15; debility 4; drowned 3; fevers 3; infls. of the brain 4, of the lungs 6; stomach 3. It is said to be the smallest number of deaths which has been reported within any week in several months.

A bloody battle has been fought near the city of Merida, capital of the province of Yucatan, (Mexico,) at the latest dates, between the Government forces and the people opposed to the present order. Upwards of 400 men were left dead on the field.

Remedy for Deafness.—The following receipt is recommended for the cure of Deafness—it has been found completely efficious in many instances.

Take the blossoms of the lily when fully ripe—lay them on a pewter plate and spread over them butter fresh from the churn without salt—then expose them to the sun until a sort of oil is formed; of this drop two drops at a time into the ear twice a day.

The crops in Sussex and Warren counties in this State are very promising.

Fine Times for the Rail Roads.—The cars on Saturday evening brought upwards of a hundred passengers to this town—an evidence that the people are beginning to find out that there are as good places as Saratoga Springs wherest to ruticate and recreate.—Democratic Banner.

Three young girls were drowned, of the ages of 14, 15, and 17, sisters and neices of Mr. Cozzens, of the American Hotel, N. Y. were drowned at West Point, last week, while bathing.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, July 3, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The doings of Congress which we have to record this week, are of importance, though it can be told in a few words. On Monday afternoon of last week, the house went into committee of the whole on the Sub-treasury bill. From 3, until 5, Mr. Rhett spoke in favor of it, when unexpectedly the motion was made to strike out the enacting clause, which was carried, 92 to 86. The bill was then reported to the house, and the previous question moved and sustained. The vote on ordering the bill to a third reading was 111 yeas to 125 nays. So the Sub-Treasury Bill was rejected by the House, by a majority of 14.

Both houses have passed resolutions to adjourn on Monday next, 9th inst.

The Texas question is still before the house.

The Senate are debating Mr. Webster's bill, which proposes to receive bills of banks which issue notes less than five dollars;—and Mr. Buchanan's bill, which is the special deposite plan. Mr. Calhoun is opposed to both, and still remains strongly in favor of the Sub-Treasury bill. Mr Clay is yet in favor of a National Bank, and says that in 1839, two-thirds of the House of representatives will be opposed to the Administration.

RAIL-ROAD.—We are happy to learn that our Rail Road is progressing rapidly. The company have just advertised for 200 men more, at $1 per day. We were informed by one of the directors last week, that it would be completed to the place before the time heretofore specified, October 1st.

We have received the 1st number of the 16th volume of the Mirror, and it fully redeems our high expectations, both in the engravings and literary contents. The latter are entirely original —by the most talented writers of the country. Any person wishing to subscribe can see it at this office.

The Drawing Cards, by J. Holbrook, which we noticed some six weeks since, we have now for sale. Those wishing to learn this agreeable and useful art, or to have their children do so, are requested to call and look at them, and purchase them, if they see fit.

We are indebted to the Hon. J. F. Randolph, for a copy of his speech on the Treasury Note Bill, for which he will please accept our thanks.

The Newark Eagle says that Webster is fast going ahead of Clay, in and out of the Senate.

The Plainfield Union thinks it "rather dull and uninteresting" in these piping times of political excitement, to abstain entirely from politics, and therefore "assiduously mingles in the outer edges, making a polite bow to each of the parties, which the chances are, will be tortured with distrust and jealousy. Take care, neighbor, or you will be jostled into the very centre of the melee, before you know why or wherefore. Politics is much like dram drinking—temperance in either is pretty nearly out of the question—you must abstain entirely or you will soon be in the whirlpool. The Union has our good wishes, but we assure him that the track he has chalked out will be found both difficult and unpleasant.—Somerset Messenger.

The Plainfield Union "begins to think that a paper without politics, is rather dull and uninteresting, both to editor and reader," and has therefore determined to give "extracts from the productions of the most eminent of both parties." And it commences this new course with Mr. Bond's speech, on one side, and an article from the Democratic Review on the other.

We felt pretty sure that the Union would find out, after awhile, that it might do a worse thing than meddle with politics; and it would not, perhaps, be very unsafe to predict, that it would be none the less respected or influential, if it should be found to have an opinion of its own, in political matters. It may be rigidly impartial—but neutrality belongs not to mind.—Fredonian.

We copy the above from the journals of both political parties, for the purpose of showing the opinions of others as to our recent course, and for making a few remarks thereon.—Many thanks to the "Messenger," for its good wishes and advice. We care not, however, for our own part, how soon we get into "the centre of the melee," —and however "difficult and unpleasant," it may be to mingle in politics, it is still more so in our opinion, to keep entirely free, or in the middle course.

If we publish a paper at all, it must be either independent, neutral, or a party one. The independent, we leave to those who are in independent circumstances, and such generally find more profitable or more agreeable business. With respect to neutrality, the Fredonian says—

"Neutrality belongs not to mind." A truer maxim our art—"the art preservative of all arts," never presented to the public eye, or stamped for preservation to remotest times. It should be the motto of all neutrals, here, there, and every where, and by the way they are not a few. A Journal may indeed "have no opinion of its own," but that qualification belongs not to mind, properly so called. A mind must have an opinion of its own, and if it have not, (pardon the bull,) there is no mind there. A paper, however, may meddle with politics, and have an opinion of its own, without becoming a mere party hack,—approving of all that the party leaders recommend, and virulently and falsely abusing all opposing men and measures. Such is not the Fredonian, but such, we regret to say, is a great proportion of the party papers of the day.

A paper neither political or literary is,—what? —Nothing?—Not quite so little, perhaps, as the nothing President Edwards speaks of such "as the sleeping rocks do dream of," still not far superior. What is there to write about? to fight about? to argue about?—Not much!!

Hear "the conclusion of the whole matter,"—though as far from being in independent circumstances, as can well be imagined, we will try the independent course awhile.

Subscribers to the Hon. W. K. Bond's speech will please call and get them. They have been ready over a week.

The Hon. Peter D. Vroom has been elected President of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Reformed Dutch Church, Dr. Thomas Dewitt, Cor. Secretry, and Wm. R. Thompson, Treasurer.

The Revi. Nicholas Murray, of the 1st Church in Elizabethtown, has been elected General Agent of the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Society, and Walter Lowrie, corresponding Secretary. The receipts of the Society last year were $48,000; expenditures $44,000.

The Senate have passed a bill to abolish imprisonment for debt to the United States, in such of the states as shall have sanctioned that policy by law.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much relieved, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended especially for sacharides worms which one of my family had been troubled with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, to doubt, will soon get into general use, as none cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Engravings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the piano forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—gayly and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama, and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, current topics, individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Mrs. Sarah Sanders, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, who are well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and which, we trust, never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Bartday-street, next door to Bookman's. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a beautiful piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid should be addressed to the editor. Subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time no books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, convenient ly arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of Sabbath teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every christian man should seek to posses in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—his well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Somerset Orphans' Court.
Term of April 1838.

UPON the application of John and Thomas Simpson administrators of James Simpson late of said County deceased, to this Court, to limit and appoint a certain time within which the creditors of the estate of said deceased, shall bring in their debts demands and claims against the same—or that such creditor, after such due notice being given, be forever barred of his or her action against the said administrators.

It is therefore ordered by the Court, that the said administrators give public notice to the creditors of said deceased, to bring in their debts, demands and claims against the said estate within one year from this time by setting up such notice in five of the most public public places in the County, for the space of two months, and also by advertising the same for a like space, in a newspaper, published in this state;

And if any creditor shall neglect to exhibit his or her debt, demand or claim, in the said period of one year after public notice given as aforesaid, such creditor shall be forever barred of his or he action therefor against the said administrators.

P. VREDENBURG, Clerk.

Dissolution.

NOTICE is hereby given that the Co-Partnership heretofore existing under the firm of FISH, COOK & CO. in this day dissolved by mutual consent. All persons indebted to the said firm are respectfully invited to call and settle their accounts without further notice.

The books are left for settlement in the hands of

Take Notice.

AS I have taken wholly upon myself the Lower Mills in Plainfield, which is now owned by George Wells, and has been formerly occupied by Wm. Wells, it is my expectation to attend to Customer work particularly. Those favoring me with their custom will be thankfully received and punctually attended to. It is my expectation to keep constantly on hand, Feed, Flour of good quality, and of all kinds, for sale, for cash.

As the public well know, or I am well aware myself of the difficulty attending keeping Books or trusting, and as promises are so fashionable with some of paying tomorrow, and as to-morrow scarcely ever comes with them, I am determined to sell for cash or in exchange for grain.

It is my expectation to be found at or near the Mill at all times and reasonable seasons, Seventh Day excepted, as I consider that day to be the Sabbath, and intend to observe it as such. PHINEAS RANDOLPH.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in its country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the useful branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" " Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
College in Studies	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights. Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield will render it, as a residence for pupils, a desirable place for the Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York, city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by rail road and stage.

ALLEN WILSON, Secretary
of the Board of Trustees.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that you should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Address 143 Nassau street.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the Instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. The c ef aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however to be at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

It will also be found that, in the days of this searching operation and reform, the standing committees of this House on the expenditures of the several departments attended to their vocation. But, very soon after General Jackson came into power, these committees became so much a matter of mere form that the chairman of one of them declared here, during the last Congress, he had never even thought it worth his while to convene his committee, and he appeared quite surprised, or at all events amused, that any inquiry was expected to be made in relation to the expenditures of these departments! This state of things forms a strong contrast with the report made here in April, 1828, by Mr. Blair, of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Public accounts and Expenditures in the State Department. He, you know Mr. Speaker, was a Jackson reformer: like the select committee he found everything wrong, and promised to correct it. The purchase of books, the employment of a librarian, and many other things, were censured—even the right to purchase a print or likeness of Gen. Washington to be suspended in the Department was questioned. How stands the matter now? Why large sums of money are yearly expended for the library of the State Department, and many books purchased, which are certainly unnecessary.

Besides the purchase of books, periodicals, and newspapers, made for this department by its disbursing agent at home, there was expended in London, during last year, for similar objects nearly $500. A librarian is employed, at a salary of 1,500, equal to that paid to the librarian of the great public library of congress. All this, too, sir, under the auspices of gentlemen who said that this part of the expenses of that Department was censurable and ought to be dispensed with, as all the officers of the Government could well avail themselves of the public library at the capitol. But Mr. Speaker, the times changed, and Mr. Van Buren and Mr. Forsyth changed with them. The State Department is now laid off into grand divisions. When Mr. Clay had charge of it, the blue book exhibited a list of a dozen names, all under the head of clerks. One of these acted as translator for the Department, and his salary was 1,150 a year. How soon in all this simplicity and economy forgotten! The Blue Book of last year divides this Department into a Diplomatic Bureau, a Consular Bureau, a Home Bureau, a 'Translator,' whose salary is 1,700, a Disbursing agent, whose salary is 1,595, a Librarian, whose salary is 1,540, a Keeper of the Archives, whose salary is 1,540, and gives one man 980 a year for packing, filing, arranging, and preserving newspapers and printed documents. This is done by that boasted democratic party which affects such hostility to what appears a dance of what they call aristocratic grandeur. The Turk whose letters are found in Salmagundi, had seen this display of Bureaus in the State Department he would have been better justified in his admiration at the grand and magnificent scale on which these Americans transact their business. But I have yet to add that those who questioned the right of the State Department to purchase a print of the immortal Washington have used the money of the People to buy prints of Gen. Jackson, and now of Martin Van Buren, for almost every room in each of the Departments.

Mr. Speaker, during this searching operation and captious fault finding, every petty expense of the several Departments was looked upon with open censure. I well remember that an item of some few dollars, paid a laborer for destroying the grass which was growing between the bricks of the paved walk leading to the State Department, was held up to public view as piece of aristocratic extravagance. Now, sir suppose I were to cite to you many similar and equally (if not more) objectionable charges in the present accounts of these Departments—such as cash paid for clearing the snow off the pavements so that Mr. Forsyth need not wet his feet; $90 a quarter for labor, 54 for sundries, 16 for work, without stating what labor or work. It might have been for killing grass, or raising vegetables for the Secretary The term sundries may conceal the same things, and the curious might inquire what use was made of the fire proof paint for which $78 were paid by the Secretary of State. But the money is well laid out, for it will preserve the edifice: and it is to be regretted that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Post master General had not made similar purchase in time to save their respective buildings. Penknives and scissors, by the dozen and half dozen, are purchased for the Secretary of State who also pays a clerk to go to Baltimore to collect a draft. An item of $100 paid by the secretary of the Treasury for the transportation of money; but how much money, or from whence, or where transported, we know not. This last charge is a kind of forfeiture of the hard-money sub Treasury system, by which, instead of transmitting the funds of the Government by means of the cheap, safe, and rapid system of exchange, which prevailed before the banks were debauched by Mr. Kendall, the public money is now to be wagoned over the country at great expense and hazard, and always with delay.

The late eminent and virtuous Attorney General, William Wirt, did not escape the censure of these indefatigable reformers. He rendered some professional services, in which the United States were interested, but which were not such as his official station charged upon him. For this service an inconsiderable sum was paid to him, but its propriety was questioned. The salary of the Attorney General was then $3,500, and he was allowed 900 for a clerk How stands the case now? The salary of Mr. Benjamin F. Butler, the present attorney General, is $4,000 and in 1834 he was paid 4,150 19 for compensation, besides being allowed 1,800 for a clerk and messenger and 500 for the contingent expenses of his office. The same additional allowance and charge, amounting together to $1,800, is made in 1835. Independent of the increased salary and the enlarged provision for a messenger, whence comes Mr. Butler's right to charge an excess of $150 19 for compensation, besides $500 for contingent expenses. In 1836 a provision of 1407 is made for his clerk and messenger, and for Mr. Butler's compensation that year he received $4,332 when his salary was only 4000. Why was this excess of 332 paid to him? He appears to have been used as a sort of Caleb Quotem. He has been allowed to enjoy the salary of his own office and that of the Secretary of War at one and the same time, being at the rate of 10,000 per year, pursuing too his profession, and receiving its emoluments. No wonder we see in him the "employing law officer of the crown." When did he ever give an opinion contrary to the wish of the President, if he knew what that was? Let me give an illustration. As the story is told, when the Baltimore railroad was about to be located at its termination in this city, the Company consulted Mr. Butler on some point as to this right of way, under their charter. After full deliberation his professional opinion was obtained in writing. It happened that Gen. Jackson felt some concerned about the location of this right of way, and he expressed an opinion on the same point requiring a termination of the road which the company did not wish and which Mr. Butler, had advised them they need not adopt. Gen. Jackson was furnished with the opinion of the Attorney General, but, instead of yielding, he endorsed on it: "Mr. Butler has not examined this case with his usual care; let this paper be referred back to him, with a copy of the charter for his re-examination." In due time, sir, the Attorney General agrees with the President and gives an opinion in conformity with that which Gen. Jackson had expressed! And this, Mr. Speaker, we need not be surprised at the absurd opinion of Mr. Butler, given as a foundation or justification for Gen. Jackson to pocket the bill repealing the Treasury circular, and which had passed both Houses of Congress almost by acclamation. Nor, indeed, should we be astonished at any opinion of his, unless he should have happened to give one different from what he supposed the President wanted.

I wish, now to make a few comments on the professions and practice of Amos Kendall, late Fourth Auditor, and now Postmaster General. This gentleman, you know, sir, was an eleventh-hour Jackson man. He, however, was among the first who got office: and immediately after his appointment, a letter of his as published, in which, after holding himself and a few friends up as having been persecuted, he exclaims, "what has Heaven done? So disposed of events, as to make Barry Postmaster General, and myself a more humble Auditor." As to Mr. Barry, no matter "what events" made him Postmaster General, we know that under his management that Department was deranged and rendered insolvent!

But how for this "humble Auditor," or, as from his own question, he is sometimes called, "this Heaven born" Amos. If history does him justice, it will be found that he devised office under Mr. Clay, which, it not being in the power of the latter to provide, Mr. Kendall espoused the cause of General Jackson.

In this letter of Mr. Kendall he says:

"I feel bound by my obligations to my country, and by the pledges so often repeated by my principal men of our party, to promote, with all my talents and industry, the reforms which the people demand. I will prove that our declarations have not been hollow pretences. Besides, I hold to the interference of Federal officers with state politics to be improper in principle."

For the reform under this last paragraph, I refer you to Mr. Kendall's letters and toasts sent to various political meetings and dinners throughout the country, for a few years past, on the eve of State elections.

When Mr. Kendall entered upon the duties of his Auditor's office, he caused to be published in the United States Telegraph, the then official organ, a letter in which he says, "The interest of the country demands that this office shall be filled with men of business, and not with babbling politicians." Sir, the whole letter was the work of a babbling politician, expressly designed for political and demagogue ends, which the writer, in the same breath, said he had quit and left for others. I will read a few passages from it. "In five days I have returned to the Post office twenty letters and three pamphlets, enclosed to the Fourth Auditor, and directed to other persons!" How long after this letter was it before Mr. Kendall, for the purpose of building up the Globe newspaper, and the fortune of his friend Francis P. Blair, (another eleventh hour Jackson man, whom he had brought from his former residence at Frankfort, Kentucky,) sent under his frank to Kentucky, and perhaps elsewhere, the prospectus of this newspaper?

In that same letter Mr. Kendall also says:

"Upon entering this office on Monday last, one of the first objects which struck my eye was a pile of newspapers on my table. Among them I counted sixteen different papers, for which I was told I was authorized to pay by the Fourth Auditor, and paid for out of the Treasury."

He sent them back, as he then stated, with a note to each; of which the following is a copy:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Fourth Auditor's Office, March 24, 1829.

Sir: Not believing that I am authorized to charge the Government with subscriptions to newspapers and other publications, which are not useful to the public service, and not perceiving that I can derive any assistance from your Journal in settling the accounts of the United States Navy, I have to request that you will discontinue to send it to this office. Respectfully, your obedient servant, AMOS KENDALL.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is a fine display of the "pride, pomp, and circumstance" of office, if not of official insolence. But yesterday he was himself the editor and publisher of newspaper; he next appears, in his own language an "humble Auditor." But, sir, does not the letter just read show that he had forgotten his humility, and become puffed up with official consequence!

MISCELLANEOUS.

Law.—If a man give you a black eye, you make him pay for it; but, if he put your eye out, you get nothing, and whatever is taken from him goes nominally to the King—really to John Stokes or Jack Nokes, who has no concern at all in the matter. If a man kill your pig, you get the value of it; but, if he kill your wife or your child, you get nothing; if any thing is got out of him, it goes to a stranger, as before. A man sets your house on fire—if by misfortune, you receive amends; if through malice, you receive nothing.—Bentham.

The moral Influence of Neatness and Taste.—Every man ought to have his house painted,—the door yard fence kept in good repair,—a number of beautiful trees set around it, briars, stones, and slovenly appearances banished from it,—a few pleasant walks laid out around his dwelling,—the lanes leading from his house to distant fields, shaded with ornamental and useful trees, and the general air of neatness and comfort universally preserved. However small may be his farm he may have all these. However poor, he may have something like this. A little diligence, contrivance, and improvement of leisure hours, will give him all these.

The moral effects of these things, on his wife and children, will be delightful. They will contribute to make a contented and happy home. The child may be taught to love the young trees, whose roots he has watered and which is growing up by his side. The family will be pleased with their home; and the love of home, and its pleasant localities, will have a healthy influence on the soul.

The library within, and the neatness and taste which surrounds, will be successful rivals to the tavern, and to wild and ruinous companionships. Who knows but these few suggestions may make several farm houses which we have seen look a little more attractive. If they should—if they make one little tree grow, we shall be well paid for writing them.—Evangelist.

Wisconsin.—The Milwaukie Advertiser says, this beautiful country bordering on Rock and Fox rivers, is settling rapidly with the best population that we have ever seen in any country.

Effects of Peace.—The peace of the world was never so general and so long maintained as at present. The consequence is, that commerce was never so much extended, the arts so much perfected, or the aggregate welfare of mankind so great. The Emperor of Russia has a palace at Berlin, where he is expected to reside some time. Kings are deprived of much of their power and exclusiveness; they visit each other's dominions, and the lion and the lamb may almost literally be said to lie down together. The elevation, of both mind and heart, is now one of the great objects of all civilized nations.—Cincinnati Gazette.

The considerations above are truly encouraging. Let the friends of peace now be awake. It is certainly in the power of Christian nations to avoid sanguinary contests with each other, and it is their imperious duty. Many considerations of overwhelming weight urge this duty upon them. Their example and mediation will have a powerful effect on the rest of the world.—Evangelist.

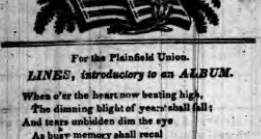
The editor of the New York Herald, in one of his recent letters from London says:

"A new mode of applying steam has been invented, which will do away with horse power entirely on canals. On the day of the launch last week, a small boat of 40 tons was passing and repassing, without paddles or sails. She had a high pressure engine on board, and thereby went puff, puff, puff, without indicating any symptom of motive power, or even a single ripple disturbing her course.

She has under her bottom a single paddle in the shape of a screw, with one turn only. Its motion propels her through the water without raising a single ripple. She was tried last week on the Surrey canal, and succeeded beyond all expectations. There is now no doubt of the entire success of the plan, and in less than a couple of years I expect to see the whole length of the Erie canal navigated by steam power, without at all injuring its banks. One such steamboat as I saw could take a train of 30 canal boats at a speed of six miles an hour.

John Barton, a young married man of large fortune, lately committed suicide, at Lexington, Ky. with a pistol.

POETICAL.



For the Plainfield Union.

LINES, introductory to an ALBUM.

When o'er the heart now beating high,
The dimming blight of years shall fall;
And tears unbidden dim the eye
As busy memory shall recal
Past joys it knew, ere yet grown cold
Beneath the world's dark frown,—ah then
How blest communion sweet to hold
With friends of early youth again!

Such may these leaves in future be;
Stamped with mementos of the past;
And on each page a friend-thought see
Smiling as when they met thee last
While these remain thou yet may'st know
The joys of days forever gone:
Nor time, nor absence o'er them throw
The mantle of oblivion.

From the Trenton State Gazette.

Hints to Young People. No. 7.

Young persons ought to be constantly occupied with some useful employment. This may be said of all persons of every age. No one can properly be idle, since time is a gift of our Maker, to be used for some good end. But there are special and peculiar reasons why the young should be always well employed.

1. Their habits of industry in future life depend much on their constant industry in youth. It is not exactly natural to men, in their present state, to love a constant employment. The more natural state is indolence, and idleness. Men must be trained to industry, or they will seldom be industrious. Young persons have much to do in training themselves to this virtue. To be without employment, gives advantage to the natural indolence of the constitution, and enables it to gain a power over all the motives to action which it is very difficult to overcome.

2. The time which young persons do not employ usefully is peculiarly dangerous to them. It affords special opportunity to dally with the temptations of vice. A young man or woman who has nothing to do is easy prey to the enemies of good morals. The snares and the habits of vice are commonly placed where the young resort when they have no useful employment. They lie thick in those corners of the streets and those public places where young men loiter in groups, smoking cigars, and using profane language, and cracking silly jokes, and indulging in just that idle and empty talk which the circumstances suggest. Evenings and Sundays spent so are a great injury to the habits and prospects of young men. And every youthful reader of these hints, who spends all his leisure moments in such places may be sure of one of these two results which he will suffer in the end. Either the habits of idleness and dissipation begun there will grow upon him, and prove his ruin for life, or he will see the time when he will look back with bitter regret on those lost hours, and feel the keen distress of virtuous sensibility in view of some serious defects of character and fortune, which were incurred by the waste of those short spaces of time. If my young readers will take counsel from experience they will find around them many who have become ambitious to be honorable and useful in the world, and who will tell them that the youth they have wasted their scraps of time, or if they did they are sorry for it.

3. Spaces of unoccupied time are not only dangerous to the good habits and prospects of the young; they will always counteract the means of advancement in every good thing. Young persons of both sexes often acquire a distaste for study and mental improvement by these occasional periods of mental dissipation. Many of our youth who are engaged at school in the course of improvement, if they take two steps forward every day in learning, take one backward every evening. They never find themselves in the morning where they left off the previous night. The idle hour was a leak in the mind, through which some of the previous contents escaped.

CHARLES CRAYON.

From the N. Y. American, June 16.

MR. EDITOR.—Before Mr. Van Buren's election to Presidency, I heard a demand of him his opinions on the subject of slavery in the District of Columbia. The demand was followed by a public exposition of them, and by a pledge, not only before, but at his induction into office, that he would use in its most rigorous and technical sense, all the power that the constitution conferred on him in the veto, to prevent the consummation of an act for a bolishing slavery in the District—no matter by what majority it might be passed by the members from the Free States, if it should be by or against the wishes of the slaveholding States.

This was in effect, to use the technical part of his power to destroy the principle of legislation engrafted in the Constitution, and to subjugate the majority in the free states to the minority in the slave states—and on a question, too, on which there was no constitutional doubt in Mr. Van Buren's mind.

Now, sir, the people of the free states ought to be informed how Mr. Clay—whose friends are pressing with a zeal which some have thought almost indecorous, his nomination on the whig party stands on this matter. This question—it is in vain to disguise or evade it—must be one of vital importance in the next Presidential canvass. And Mr. Clay's relation to it ought to be understood now, before there is any further commitment; it ought to be known whether, if elected he would hold himself bound to the South, to veto any act that might be passed for abolishing slavery in the district, as Mr. Van Buren pledged himself to do. A portion of the whigs, and one so large that it cannot well be spared, will never vote for a slaveholder on any terms—but if that slaveholder should pledge himself, systematically to disregard the principle of constitutional legislation, and thus degrade the free states, in order that his system of slavery might be maintained at the seat of Government, the whig party may as well close its accounts, so far as he is concerned. This matter ought to be at once, and well understood by THE FREE STATES.

Heroism in a Slave.—We conversed a few days since, with a gentleman who has been the last winter in Charleston S. C., and he stated, that he witnessed while there, the sale at auction, of not long, probably then a thousand negroes. One man, or rather a slave, who was being sold, observing that he was about to be purchased by a gentleman, other than the one who had bought his wife, raised his hands and with a loud voice declared that he would not be sold and separated from his wife.—"I had as lief die here," said he "as any where else," and immediately jumped from the table. Our informant says that a perfect silence ensued; and such was the effect of this noble and courageous declaration, that the purchaser of the wife gave up his bargain, and arrangements were made to have both husband and wife sold to the same purchaser.

This conduct of the slave was the outbreaking of wronged, indignant humanity—it was the language of truth—of nature bursting forth from the soul of a man, under a deep sense of unrighteousness and oppression; and it went home to the consciences of his oppressors, for they were appalled—confounded, in view of the vile injustice and impiety which they were about to perpetrate. Were it not for the blinding nature of long continued habit, the slaveholder would see at once, not only that slavery is unjust in principle, but that it is at war with the best sympathies of our nature.—Adv. of Freedom.

From the Watchman.

Oh! ye Fathers!

We have said so many good things about the duties of wives and mothers, that we are not sorpris d that we have been charged by them with partiality; and it has been suggested by more than one fair one, that it would now be quite becoming for us to enlighten somewhat the "lordly" part of our readers, upon several points of their duty. This certainly, is what we would fain attempt; but it is difficult to know where to begin. There are so many things which demand some broad hints, that we hardly know which to take first. We shall venture, in this short article, (for men love short articles best—especially if they deal plainly,) to "show up the sin of

FAULT FINDING.

Some men make their wives very miserable, by a thoughtless habit of finding fault with every thing which comes in their way. This habit is very apt to find indulgence at the table. Many a faithful wife has toiled during the hours of a forenoon, to prepare a well dressed dinner for her husband. Many a time perhaps, she congratulated herself upon the success which she supposed had attended her efforts, as she looked over the bountiful dishes she had prepared; and she had waited almost with impatience for the return of her husband, that she might for once receive the smile of his approbation. He came. But it was his habit to find fault. It was a part of his business at table. The usual amount of it was indulged on this occasion. "The potatoes are half-raw;" "the steak is over done—altogether overdone; I like steaks cooked rare—I have said that often enough." "The gravy is too thin; it reminds one of water gruel." "I ate a capital pudding at the hotel the other day I wish I could have such an one at home." These sentences, perhaps, were uttered thoughtlessly, and with no bad intention; but oh, ye Fathers! do ye know, that such sayings thoughtless though they be—and they are too often entirely uncalled for—know ye not that such sayings sting the heart? A woman toils with pleasure if she finds her endeavors are appreciated: but her soul is discouraged, when her husband rewards her devotion to his enjoyments and convenience, only by frowns, sneers, and complaints. That man who heedlessly or intentionally finds fault on every occasion, only lays the foundation for his own misery; for he takes away an important motive, which actuates the wife to thoughtfulness and pains-taking; and she must be more than a common woman, who in the face of repeated fault finding and censoriousness, can find a heart long to exert herself—only to receive again the same reward. The New York Star, gives an account of a truly wonderful economy in fuel, in a recent improvement in Steamboat machinery. The experiment was made in a boat (how large is not stated) that made a trip from New York to Sandy Houk, and back, using only one and a half cords of wood. The rate of travel (says the Star) was from nine to twelve miles an hour. Mr. Bennett the inventor of this new and remarkable application of steam is perfectly assured of its success, and we learn that Robert L. Stevens Esq. of Weehawken has been said that upon him alone the mantle of Fulton's genius has fallen, has expressed an opinion that the importance of the principle will effect an entire revolution in steam navigation. We cannot here enter into a minute description of the principle, and will at present remark only that the smoke and every portion of the fuel is consumed, and that the air is pumped from without by means of two cylinders moved by the steam cylinders. This air expands by contact with the blaze, and mingles with the steam and increases the power by a determinate ratio. The blaze of the furnace is poured directly into the boiler. The extraordinary economy of fuel is the greatest desideratum acquired by Bennett's discovery, and steam ships may thus carry any amount of freight, scarcely any fuel being required.

Money Plenty.—The Philadelphia Gazette says;

The late sale by Mr. Thomas & Son, of wines belonging to the late Mr. T. Butler, was very numerously attended, and the prices paid were enormous. Among other transactions were the following; Fifteen demijohns sold at $155 each; one at $150; seven at 137; five at 117 50; ten at 110; seventeen at 106; thirteen at 102 50; four at 101, and various other wines for lesser sums. One hundred and seventy demijohns were sold—the whole amount of which is upwards of $15,000.

We have made a hurried estimate of the value of some of these wines, and find that the price, as paid at auction, is at least half a dollar per wine glass of the usual size—something as it were like molten silver, and affording a plausible image of the aurum potabile

The Croton Water Works.—The Aqueduct which is to bring Croton river into the city of N. York will be 40 miles long. It will have an unvarying descent from the starting point, 8 miles above Sing Sing, to Harlem heights, where it comes out 114 feet above high water mark. A great army of men are now at work along the line, and at many points the aqueduct is complicated. The bottom is an inverted arch of brick; the sides are laid with hewn stone in cement, then plastered on the inside, and then within the plaster a four inch brick wall is carried up to the arch, and thence the top is formed with an arch of double brick work. It will stand for ages a monument of the enterprise of the present generation.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer gives the following report of side scenes in the House of Representatives:—

"On Tuesday last Mr. Petriken and Mr. Cushing, (better known as Mr. Previous Question) had some squabbling. They are brethren of the same principle, and ought to live in love and unity.—Petriken has the most eccentricity and independence; Cushing the most good humor, and I suspect the most dry Yankee wit. Petriken wears a long queue. After the brush between the parties was over, Cushing inquired—"does not the previous question cut off every thing?" Being answered in the affirmative, he very drily remarked, that in the first opportunity I have, I'll move the previous question on Petriken's cue, and cut that off."

In compliance with a call from the House of Representatives, the President sent a message to that body on the 20th inst. in relation to the border troubles. The outrages on the steamboats Telegraph and Robert Peel, have produced no demand by either government upon the other, for redress, having been treated by both parties, as criminal offences, for the laws to punish. The President expresses his determination to exert all his power to prevent and punish disturbances of the peace and good understanding of the two nations, and his confident hopes of a speedy and and satisfactory termination to the present border troubles.

The removal of the Cherokees, from all the states interested—viz: Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and North Carolina—seems likely to be effected without bloodshed, or violence of any sort. About 6000 of them had been collected, at the last accounts: and they were voluntarily coming in from all quarters.

Fruit and Vegetables.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Gazette attributes the high price of fruit and vegetables, which has doubled within a few years, to the fact that the supply does not increase in proportion to the increase of population. The writer is of opinion that such is the great demand for vegetables and fruit in the N. York market, that 500 additional small gardening establishments might be commenced in the vicinity of that city, with a certainty of success, and especially on Long Island and New Jersey. He says that a number of individuals within 3 or 4 years, have availed themselves of the knowledge of the fact of the scarcity of supply to the population, and purchased plots of one and two acres within 6 and 7 miles of that city and have devoted their time in raising early vegetables, and with such success that numbers have this year been induced to follow their example. He mentions some instances of great profit from the culture of market fruits and vegetables. A few years since a respectable tradesman, who had retired from his business and was living on a small income, which he was desirous to increase, conceiving that a good business might be done by supplying the N. Y. market, leased a small tract of land on Long Island and commenced raising flowers, strawberries, tomatoes, and mint. The first year he paid all expenses—the second year he made $1300, and the 3d year cleared $2100 by his little garden, as he was wont to call it. Some vegetable gardeners have, with little trouble cleared off 2 acres of land, at sums from 1200 to 1800 per annum. A gentleman living near Brooklyn made over $900 last year on one article, strawberries, sold in the Fulton market. A female living in the vicinity of New York, saved and sold $550 dollars worth of mint, with comparatively little trouble or expense. He says that any family possessing themselves of two acres of fertile land, with a little occasional industry, may clear $1000 per annum, and have more than half their time to apply to other objects.

A building of great size (containing 156 rooms) has been lately erecting in Washington city, for the use of the Treasury Department; when lo! no sooner are the walls all up, than it is discovered that they must be taken down again. A committee of Congress, assisted by two able architects, have reported in substance—

That the building is placed where it ought not to be.

That it is not suited to the purpose for which it is intended.

That it is exceedingly ugly.

That if completed on the present plan, it will inevitably tumble down.

They therefore recommend that it be taken to pieces, and be built in another place on a better plan. The expenses already incurred are about $80,000, and to unbuild it will take 30,000 more; total 110,000.

Pleasure Excursion.—A steamboat pleasure excursion is in contemplation by parties of ladies and gentlemen at Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Louisville, to the falls of St. Anthony, in the Upper Mississippi! The steamboat Dayton has been fitted up expressly for the purpose.

For the Plainfield Union.

A Cloud is on thy Brow.

A cloud is on thy brow, my love!
A cloud is on thy brow,
The low'ring mark thine eye above,
In pressing even now.
Thy forehead, once so clearly bright
Showed no such fearful stain,
But now it brings to fancy's sight
The ancient brand of Cain.

What has come o'er thee, dearest, say?
What trouble hast thou met—
Has fortune in a single day,
The current backward set?
Has the high tide of thine affairs
That onward smoothly flowed
Begun to ebb; and secret cares
Press down with heavy load?

Hast thou at last the bitter fruit
Of hollow friendship found?
Hath disappointment struck thee mute,
And bow'd thee to the ground?
Or has thy note, lent to thy friend,
A protest got from bank,
Whilst thou dost think nought can defend
Ingratitude so rank?

Mayhap the stocks by sudden rise
From wind-sales low took wing,
Have made the tears rush to thine eyes
Because thou wert a "Bear."
Or have they, by a fall as great,
When hopes they'd rise, were fall,
Upon thy bosom placed a weight
Because thou wert a "Bull?"*

Or has vile slander raised its head,
Unsheathed its hissing tongue;
And in its aim to strike thee dead,
Its venom round thee flung?
Or did the tailor in his haste
To fit thee for the ball,
With narrow vestments pinch thy waist
And make thy "pants," too small?

Did speculation once so rife
In wilderness and town,
Make thee hold to thy "lots," like life,
Until the price went down?
Or has the printer caused thy piece
So brisk with Attic salt,
To sound like cackling of the geese,
Or taste as flat as malt?

Has any one a boon denied
Or vexed thee by neglect—
Or on thy manners in his pride
E'en ventured to reflect?
Or hast thou, when assent was due
Been answered with an "If?"
Or has the laundress made too blue,
Or starched thy "dicky" stiff?

Hush, hush, I pray, and list space—
These trouble not my head,
Nor have they o'er my sunny face
"Disastrous twilight shed."
I'll whisper what affects me now—
'Tis nothing else, by Jove—
I drew my hand across my brow,
Whilst blacking my cool-stove!

BOZMORUS.

Red River.—A letter from Capt. Shreve is published in the army and Navy Chronicle, from which we learn that he has succeeded in affording to a very extensive region, the benefit of a free water communication. The navigation of the Red River has been opened 750 miles, by removing 165 miles of raft. The tributaries of this river, will afford about 600 miles of navigable water, with partial improvements of their channels; and by extending these improvements farther up the Red River and its branches, the whole line of navigation will then be extended 2,000 miles. The region has as fine a climate and soil as any part of this continent; and is abundantly fitted for the cultivation of cotton. It is now filling up rapidly with population.

The advantages to be derived from the removal of the raft, are now incalculable. Captain Shreve says see the value of the Government lands alone, to have been enhanced, at least $15,000,000.

The N. Y. Whig says 200 persons dine daily at Astor's throughout the year, and that they consume on an average one pint of wine each, every day. For the year that is 9125 gallons selling for $36,600.

The English travellers complain that there are no longer any women in the United States—they have all come to be ladies. We are afraid that this is too much the case, and the evil is increasing. Our friend Holbrook, one of the plainest men in the world, and one, moreover, who goes about doing good, has addressed a letter to the editors of the Jour. of Com. in which he says:

"Junior, and even juvenile members of families, both misses and lads, are provided for in those domestic schools of science, sound morals and elevated enjoyment."

Now if there has been any women for mothers these "juvenile members of families" would have been boys and girls instead of misses and lads.—U. S. Gaz.

The aggregate length of the steamboats on the Ohio and Mississippi rivers is said to be about ten miles.

Noah's Ark, taking the cubit at 22 inches, was 547 English feet long, 91 broad, and 54 high, measuring, according to Bishop Wilkins, 72,228 tons.

The Difference.—In England and Scotland the consumption of ardent spirits is 9 pints per head annually, while in Ireland it is 13 pints per head.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, July 10, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

We are indebted to the Hon. J. B. Aycrigg, of the House of Representatives, for several important and voluminous public documents.

Mr. Bond's speech has been translated into French by the editor of the New Orleans Advertiser, and was presented to his readers in that language, on the 21st ult. He says it is the first translated copy of the speech in the Union, and that as he has taken so much pains to please his readers they should carefully peruse it.

Most of our exchange papers for three weeks back have been filled with accounts of the loss of the steam boat Pulaski. We think a paper can be better filled than by recording all the particulars of such unfortunate accidents, occasioned in almost all cases by imprudence, and a want of proper care in those to whom are intrusted the lives and property of their fellow men. The reading of such accounts too often, that is as often as they occur now-a-days, can do no possible good, but often deadens sensibility to the sufferings of others, by bringing them too constantly before the mind. We at length become so accustomed to them that they seem of little moment. These terrible accidents will continue to happen frequently in our country until boats shall be constructed for strength and safety as well as speed, and no longer.

Of all on board the Pulaski, 59 have been saved and about 140 must have been lost.

With the Washington about 20 were lost

The News from Connecticut as respects the Temperance Reform, is very cheering. The License system was remodelled by the last Legislature, and several wholesome regulations established, for which they deserve commendation. The bill which passed has the following excellent provisions, which we extract from the American Temperance Journal:

1st. That no person shall sell less than five gallons of wine or distilled spirituous liquor to be carried away, unless he shall previously lodge with the town clerk a bond of 300 for the observance of all laws relating to sales of wine and spirits to be drank in his house, shop, &c., nor suffer the same to be drank there. Penalty for violating the act $50.

2. When a person keeps a dram or grog shop, and has on hand wine or spirits, he may be prosecuted for violation of law, and reputation shall be prima facie evidence of guilt; if the defendant denies his guilt on oath, he shall be acquitted, unless there is other clear evidence of guilt.

3. Civil authorities and select men may, on the first Monday of January, prohibit any person selling less than five gallons, and collect a penalty for so doing of $50.

4. Selectmen of towns may license a person to keep a vitualling house, without a tavern license, on lodging with the town clerk a bond not to sell or keep any spirits, wine, or ale, on penalty of ten dollars.

5. No person shall be licensed as a taverner, unless he has two spare beds and sufficient stabling for keeping four horses more than his own stock, and shall for fist his license so if he is without.

6. No licensed taverner shall sell to any minor, apprentice, student of college, academy, or boarding school, any ale, wine or spirits, on penalty of ten dollars, and if convicted of so doing shall not be licensed another year.

These acts will put an end to the conversion of groceries into dram shops; the great evil in Connecticut.

The remarks by Judge Buel given below, we like much. They are addressed to young men, inciting them to diligence, to activity, and to usefulness, and being, as we conceive, a subject of much importance, we take the liberty of calling attention to it, and giving it a conspicuous place in our paper.

Application.—Neither talents, nor wealth or virtues are hereditary. You must build your own foundation—you must become the artificers of your own future fame and fortune. You must yourselves enrich your minds, sow the seeds and mature the good plants, if you would reap the abundant harvest and enjoy the reward. The elements of education which you have gathered in the schools, are the paper upon which you are to record your characters—the mere implements of usefulness. They will profit you only as you use them with diligence and good judgement. But the standard of your requirements must not be graduated by the past. Every age demands a greater degree of mental culture than the one which preceded it: and it behooves you to qualify yourselves for that which now dawns upon your mental vision.—The more you learn to depend upon yourselves the more you will find developed capacities and energies and of which you are yet unconscious of possessing—the more likely you will be to prosper in life. The sapling which is sheltered by the towering pine, or the wide spreading oak, is neither so strong or so graceful as that which grows up without shelter, and acquires strength and solidity from the buffetings of the winds and storms. And the plant that is nurtured in the shade is not so beautiful—its blossoms are not so fragrant, nor its fruits so rich, as the form, the flower and the fruit of that which grows in the glare of solar light

In an article in our paper two weeks since, we stated that horse racing was to be the order of the day in Rahway, on the 4th. Mr. Green is right,—we spoke loosely, and far from the truth. The day was very appropriately celebrated in the Presbyterian church in Upper Rahway. At the race course, some distance from Rahway, there was horse-racing, and hand-balls, stating that such would be the case, misled us.

Congress probably adjourned yesterday. Since our last, there have been great doings on the currency or treasury question, but to find out what has been done would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer. As we understand it, it is somewhat as follows. We stated in our last that the senate were debating Mr. Webster's and Mr. Buchanan's bills. Both were subsequently rejected. Mr. Wright then on Saturday, June 30th, offered a bill according to previous promise, modifying the deposite act, to permit receiving in payment of public dues, until October next, the bills of banks which have since July 4th, 1836, issued bills under the denomination of five dollars. Mr. Webster offered an amendment as a second section of the bill, permitting these banks to become depositories of the public money. This amendment was amended on motion of Mr. Wright, making the 2nd section a repeal of the whole deposite system —in effect the Sub-Treasury scheme, without any limitation. The bill thus amended passed the Senate on Monday, 2d inst. by a majority of five.

On Tuesday it was reported to the House, and read twice. On Wednesday, 4th inst. the 2nd section, or the amendment of Mr. Webster's amendment, was stricken out, and the bill as first reported by Mr. Wright was ordered to a third reading, 133 to 33, and then passed by a vote of 173 to 31—majority 142! The bill thus amended was then returned to the Senate, and concurred in by them the same afternoon, 29 to 17, and is now the law of the land.

The consequence of all this, in our opinion, is, that the law for depositing the public money with the state banks not having been repealed is now in full force. But the 5th section of that act expressly forbids the receipt of the bills of all banks issuing notes under $5, after July 4th, 1836; and also expressly forbids making deposites in such banks. Mr. Wright's bill just passed modifies this section so as to permit the bills of these banks to be received in payment of public dues; but the law forbidding them to be used as depositories has not been repealed. It was the object of Mr. Webster's amendment to make them lawful depositaries, but it was lost. This is a very important distinction, and we think it will be found to be correct. There are not, therefore now but six or eight banks in the United States, where it is lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to deposite the public money, nearly every one in all the states having lately issued notes under the denomination of five dollars. Those only which have not, can be used as depositories under the old deposite act, when they have resumed specie payments.

The Whigs are speaking of the vote which carried Mr. Wright's bill through the house as a great party triumph. Indeed, we do not see as they have any cause. Their amendment making the aforesaid banks depositories was lost, as was also the amendment of the administration party, repealing the deposite act; so far it would seem the two parties were equal. The bill, however finally passed both houses, precisely as it was reported from the committee on Finance by one of the heads of the Van Buren party, and not by a party vote at all. Mr. Wright in his report on Mr. Webster's resolution, said that such a bill ought to pass, and it is by no means wonderful that large majorities in both houses agreed with him. It cannot, therefore, in any way be considered a party triumph—the vote in the house was almost unanimous.

Mr. Adams has continued his speech against Texas every morning hour during the week.

The Washington correspondent of the Newark Daily Advertiser, under date of July 5th, thus writes:

The Hon. Felix Grundy, of the Senate, is Attorney general of the U. S. The nomination was confirmed to day, and it is a better appointment on the whole, than was looked for. Mr. Paulding has taken his place in the Navy Department. The session is now within three or four days of its close, and business is despatched. Much private business, and some appropriation bills, have been cleared the docket.

The Army bill has been signed by the President, so that an addition of 4,500 soldiers is to be recruited.

The Senate passed a joint resolution on Wednesday authorising the publication of the Madison papers, appropriating $6000 for the purpose.

Silver Change is promised in a bill which passed the Senate on Wednesday. The bill authorizes the branch mints in Georgia and North Carolina to coin silver change of the denominations of twenty five cents, ten cents, and five cents. These branches were originally intended to coin gold only, but it is found that the same machinery which will strike half eagles and quarter eagles will also strike the smaller pieces of silver, and that no additional expense will be incurred by this extension. It is a measure of great moment, as the Globe says, to increase the quantity of silver change in the country.

The bill which originated in the Senate for regulating steamboat navigation passed the House on Wednesday with important amendments; one of which, introduced on motion of Mr. Childs imposes a fine of $5000 for every case of loss of life or lives by Steamboat boiler explosions. All the amendments save one, were agreed to by the Senate on Thursday, and for that Mr. Webster offered a substitute, declaring an explosion to be prima facie evidence of neglect. This was agreed to, and the bill again returned to the House for its concurrence.

In the general annual bill concerning Post Offices and Post Roads, is contained a provision, inserted by amendment, carried in the House by a large majority, requiring the Postmaster General to dispense with the Express Mail as early as practicable. This bill has yet to pass the Senate.

Samuel Adams.—His principles on the subject of human rights carried him far beyond the narrow limits which many loud asserters of their own liberty have prescribed to themselves, even to the acknowledgment of this right in every human being. One day his wife returning home informed him that a friend had made her a present of a female slave. Mr. Adams replied in a firm and decided manner, "she may come but not as a slave, for a slave cannot live in my house, if she comes, she must come free." She came and took up her abode with the family of this great champion of American liberty, where she lived and died free.

Patrick Henry.—"Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take, but for me, give me liberty, or give me death."

General Gates, previous to leaving Virginia, summoned his numerous family and slaves around him, and amidst their tears of affection and gratitude gave them all their freedom; and in addition a sufficiency to render their freedom a blessing to them.

We know not the author of the following communication, and as we were not present at the meeting referred to, we know not to whom the writer alludes:

For the Plainfield Union.

At a meeting held at this place on the 4th inst. for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of organizing a colonization society, upon the motion declaring it expedient to establish such a society, several gentlemen rose and addressed the meeting in favor of the resolution, one of whom deserves public notice. He in a part of his elaborate harangue, dwelt with peculiar emphasis upon a class of people termed abolitionists, and indulged in some of the most unfounded assertions—charged them with being the sole causes of the mobs which have disgraced some of the most populous cities of our republic. Another charge more foolish than the rest was, that their work was all in vain, and that they could never accomplish their object, i. e. the abolition of slavery. Such were some of the imputations.

A proper respect for the sentiment of our forefathers "all men are created equal" and a regard for these advocates of liberty and equal rights, methinks, would have forbidden the indulging of such observations. They are alike averse to truth and common sense, and will thus appear to every unprejudiced mind. Let but one ray of truth beam upon such statements, and they will appear in this true character and I confess for one were I the author, I would hide my face with shame. But should he after mature deliberation cling to his gross errors, let him endeavor to substantiate them, and they will meet with all proper attention from A FRIEND TO ABOLITION.

Plainfield July 9th, 1838.

Providential Escape.—A recruiting sergeant, bound to Albany in the Swallow with two recruits one of whom was so mutinous that he had to be pinioned, while watching his disorderly road, became drowsy, lost his balance, and fell into the river unobserved. The sloop Elmira Ann was providentially following. Her crew were alarmed at hearing the cry of "save me! save me!" and then "its too late—I must go." They hove to, lowered a boat, and after a diligent search, succeeded in extricating from his perilous situation the drowning soldier. Their kind attentions were repaid by his reanimation in the course of half an hour.

Dreadful Famine in India.—The over-land despatch from India (via Marseilles) arrived in London, bringing intelligence from Calcutta and Madras to the middle, and from Bombay to the end of March. The accounts of the progress of the famine in the Western provinces are most horrible; the inhabitants of the Agra are compelled to forego their evening drives on account of the intolerable effluvia arising from the dead bodies surrounding the station. A small river, near Cawnpore, is said to be literally choked with the corpses of the multitude starved to death. A relief fund has been opened at Calcutta, and on the 15th of March the subscription amounted to above 40,000 rupees.

Williams Wooley, of N. York, has contrived a sideboard bedstead—a piece of furniture which in all respects resembles a sideboard, but the doors of which when opened, disclose a bedstead bed, and bedding, to be drawn out.

Reform in representation are still in their infancy in England. Under the present system, some boroughs of 6000 to 20,000 inhabitants, have as full a representation as Birmingham and Manchester.

An Astronomical Observatory, the first in this country, has just been completed at Williams College, Williamstown, Mass. principally through the instrumentality of Professor Hopkins.

Extraordinary Wind.—A current of wind passed over West Jersey, not far from Mount Holly, on Sunday week, which broke off large oak trees, and tore up large apple trees by the roots, and confined to a narrow space. Several animals were killed by lightning during a thunder shower.

Jamaica papers have been received to the 9th June. The Royal Gazette says "it has been decided by the House of Assembly, that the remainining two years of the apprenticeship of the Prædial laborers shall be abandoned, and that entire, complete, and unrestricted freedom shall take place on the first of August next in this island."

Manners in Missouri.—A member elect of the lower chamber of the Legislature of this State was last year persuaded by some wags of his neighborhood, that if he did not reach the State House at 10 o'clock on the day of Assembly he could not be sworn and would lose his seat. He immediately mounted, with hunting frock, rifle and bowie knife, and spurred till he got to the door of the State House, where he hitched his nag. A crowd were in the lower house on the ground floor, walking about with their hats on and smoking cigars. Those he passed, ran up stairs into the Senate chamber, set his rifle against the wall and bawled out, "Strangers, whare the man that sworn me in?" at the same time taking out his credentials. "Walk this way," said the clerk, who was at the moment igniting a real principe, and he was sworn without inquiry. When the Teller came to count noses he found that there was one Senator too many present: the mistake was soon discovered, and the huntsman was informed that he did not belong there. "Fool who! with your corn bread!" he roared. "You can't flunk this child no how you can fix it. I'm elected to this ere Legislature, and I'll go again all banks and eternal improvements, and if there's any of you oratory gentlemen wants to get skinned, just say the word, and I'll light up on you like a nigger on a wood chuck. My constituents sent me here, and if you want to floor this ere legged animal, hop on, just as soon as you like, for though I'm from the back country I'm a little smarter than any other quadruped you can turn out of this drove." After this admirable harangue, he put his bowie knife between his teeth, and took up his rifle with, "Come here, old Suke stand by me!" at the same time presenting it to the chairman, who, however, had seen such people before. After some explanation, the man was persuaded that he belonged to the lower chamber, upon which he shouldered his rifle, flung his gun on his shoulder, and with a profound congee, remarked, "Gentlemen, I beg your pardon, but if I didn't think that ar lower room was the grogery, may I be shot."

The Exploring Expedition.—Mr. Dickinson announces in a Naval General Order dated June 22d, that considering the peaceful character of the contemplated exploring expedition and its objects being altogether scientific, the President has thought proper to depart from the usual custom of assigning the command to senior officers of the Navy, and has appointed Lieut. Charles Wilkes, first officer, and Lieut. Wm. Ic. Hudson, second officer of the exploring squadron: the latter to take the command in case of the death of the first officer, or his disability, from accident or sickness to conduct the operations of the Expedition.—Balt. Tran.

Crops in the West.—One of the Editors of the N. Y. Express has made a tour through New York, Michigan, Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, Pensylvania, Maryland and a part of Virginia, and his route, having generally been through the interior, has afforded him an opportunity of forming a fair opinion of the probable harvest. He states that the general appearance is highly gratifying and indicates a much more abundant harvest than was gathered last year. In Maryland, he says, the wheat and rye, clover, oats and corn crops all are flourishing and equal the warmest wishes of the planter. Perhaps the tobacco crop ought to be excepted.—Ib.

The Difference.—The great fire in N. York two and a half years ago, was full four times as destructive as the late fire in Charleston. On the former occasion, the New York Charity Committee put forth an eloquent and touching appeal to the people of the Union for aid, and yet the entire contributions, exclusive of those made within the city of New York itself, amounted to less than $15,000; and the amount of those made from the South was less than $3,000. On the other hand, the contributions already made to the Charleston sufferers amount to upwards of seventy thousand dollars, and the greater portion of that amount is from the North. Shall we have any more dissertations upon Northern parsimoniousness and hostility to the South?—[Louisville Journal.

We learn by the Kennebec Journal that the Sheriff of Savannah Geo. has arrived at Augusta and demanded of the Executive that a Mr. Kelleran and another be delivered up to be tried in Georgia, for bringing away a slave by a Thomaston schooner. This demand has before been made, but the men were not delivered—the former made, but the men were not delivered—the former of the demand have been altered, but the men will not be given up, as it is contended, and we think with great propriety that this case does not come within the provision of the Constitution when fugitives from justice are liable to be reclaimed. Georgia will have occasion to bluster a little more on this subject, and it will make another flaming paragraph in the message of her Governor.—Bangor Mechanic.

Governor Marcy has issued his Proclamation convoking the Senate of New York, for a special session, at the City Hall, New York, to commence on the 16th July, "for the purposes of receiving and considering the nominations of persons to be submitted to them for filling such offices as now are or may be vacant.

It is a fact which should not be lost sight of, that wherever the Banks have resumed they have increased their stock of specie by the operation. This is conclusive evident that there is no disposition among the people to harm the Banks—but, on the contrary a desire to aid them in every attempt to fulfill their duty to the public.

J. HAWLEY'S
VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS
PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended the Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your vegetable pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be sought into general use, and the delegation that I feel in you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased after having made use of them in my family, and can fully say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and effective cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might, prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended; especially for ascarides of worms; one of my family has been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College, or also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
Higher branches,	5.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2 25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights. Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient and cheap.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. The publication of tracts, and other works is prohibited by the constitution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of weekly visits, with the essential benefits of a cheap form for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently understood and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, but omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise with speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the most interesting, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired.

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Address 143 Nassau street.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE
Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout this country, and not an instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.

Their effects will be taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever is morbid or bilious that they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various unctions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

Pamphlets giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at their Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

New Volumes.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume
OF THE
New York Mirror,
Will be issued on the 20th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Engravings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volumes; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales, and heavy, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented to the notice and appreciation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of possessing our publication with the commencement of the volume, will please to supply, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial department of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known in the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the Mirror will be quick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes so many valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable mélange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the pianoforte of the country—intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and of all both sexes possessing a spark of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once nearly three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firm ess and impartiality, but without harshness. Its c ief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public are assured that the idle, indolent, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

Why did he not simply tell his brother editors, in brief and respectful language, that he had discontinued the subscription for their paper.

But a further thought is suggested by this letter of Amos Kendall, and his reason for discontinuing newspaper subscriptions. He is now, sir, postmaster General. Suppose we look at the statement of the contingent expenses of his office for the last year. Do you think we shall find any subscriptions for newspapers there "paid for out of the Treasury." Listen to a few items:

Southern Literary Messenger,	$10 00
New York Journal of Commerce,	10 00
Alleghany Democrat,	14 81
Pennsylvania,	6 00
Indian Biography,	8 00
Metropolitan Magazine,	5 00
Three copies of the Daily Globe! !	30 00
Richmond Enquirer,	6 00

Sundry others which I will not stop to name; the whole number being twenty or upwards, and the total of subscription within a small fraction of $200! He was frightened at a pile of 16 newspapers, but he can now take 20 at a dose! Can it be possible that a man, who came into office declaring, like the Psaltist of old, that "he was not like other men," his excellence "of the mint, and cummin," begins already to neglect the weightier matters of the law? What becomes of this inflated promise to "prove" that his "declarations had not been hollow" pretences! Of what value was his declaration, made in his latter before referred to, and which he says, "Vain I may be, proud I am, that the President has given me an opportunity to aid him in proving that reform is not an empty sound, and is not to apply merely to a change of men!" Why, sir, I quote as a reply to these [illegible] sentences his own words, in another passage of his own letter. The world will know him, at last, and assign him his true rank."

"Truth is omnipotent, and public justice certain."

Among Mr. Kendall's reforms may be mentioned his leading agency in the removal of the public deposites from the Bank of the United States. To effect this, he carried on a system of "billing and cooing" with the State banks, and in the language of a certain Senator, (Mr. Benton,) "debauched them." Yes, sir, debauch is the word. I apply it to the Government and banks, though the Senator thought the people had been debauched, and applied it so them. For this work of "debauch," which proved a serious curse to the country, this agent was employed 32 days, and was paid for this service the sum of $316 11, being about ten dollars a day for a job which has occasioned much embarrassment under which the country now labors. He got ten dollars a day for doing this injury to the Public,—a hard-working man finds it difficult to get his dollar a day. But still, Mr. Kendall belongs to the "democratic party," and while he received his ten dollars a day for that work, he also received the regular salary of his office. This appears to be an established usage of this administration. The case of the Attorney General is already mentioned. The reports from the Departments show several other cases, though I will now only add that of the Commissioner of Indian affairs, who was for a while acting Secretary of War, and during this period drew the salaries of each office, being at the rate of $6,000 a year.

But, Mr. Speaker, no man better knows all the tricks of office than Amos Kendall. I have read a political tract, written I think, by Dean Swift, entitled somewhat in this way: "The convenience of a place at Court, or a sure mode of providing garments for a whole family." Mr. Kendall appears to understand the "modus operandi" of this matter. The printed list of clerks in the Department exhibits his father-in-law and two nephews, with salaries of $1,000, 1,200 and 1,400; and thus we see a family provision of nearly $10,000 a year, including his own salary. But Amos Kendall is not the only officer who thus takes care of his own household. If provision of this kind be evidence of "faith," few of them will be found "infidels." The President's son has an office, which I have already mentioned, of $1,500 a year. The Secretary of State's son, until very lately, held the place of District Attorney in Alabama. A near relation, by marriage, of the Secretary of the Treasury has a comfortable annuity of $1,400 in the Navy Department: another holds the appointment of naval officer in Boston, with a salary of 3,000 per year, besides being President of the Lafayette Bank of that city, which became a special pet under the pet bank system. These gentlemen would all make excellent sub-treasurers!

Mr. Boon said, when the proposition for retrenchment was under consideration here in 1828, the friends of Mr. Adams by way of praying that he and they desired any just economy and reform, put a ted to his message recommending it. How were they answered? Why, sir, Mr. Ingham, who soon afterwards was made Secretary of the Treasury, said in reply, that the message did not recommend it, but he wanted to see more practice and less profession in this matter. There were no specified reforms found in the message; he could only find there one of those formal recommendations, which were as unmeaning he said as the words "your humble servant" at the foot of a letter. Mr. Randolph, in the same debate, used this language, on the subject of retrenchment and reform:

"The President did recommend them [those lofty generalities spoken of by which all sermons, political or religious, abound] which might be printed in blank, line law presses, and filled as occasions might require. But, sir, (said he,) I am for looking at the practices and not at the precepts of the person, political or religious."

Mr. Bond said this rule of Mr. Randolph was perfectly just; it was thus shown, too, to be avowed by this administration, and he was willing to judge them by their own rule, and he thought to this they ought not to object. He would leave it to the House and to the People to say whether the "practices" of this Administration "had conformed to their precepts."

Was the recommendation in General Jackson's inaugural address of [illegible] "lofty generalities" just spoken of, and denounced by Mr. Randolph? The "Unis Caliber" machine? Was not the art of feeding, otherwise reform well described as "legibly inscribed" as the general impulse. That patronage of the Federal Government which was said to be brought into conflict with the freedom of State elections has greatly increased and is still unrestrained in the same conflict.

The gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. Bell) has for years labored to bring this House to the consideration of a bill to secure the freedom of elections, and thus carry into effect the recommendation of General Jackson's inaugural address. Now, sir, that gentleman is, and untiring as he has been in his efforts, the measure proposed by him has received the frowns instead of the favor of the Administration. He and the venerable Senator from the same State (Mr. White) were the early and devoted friends of General Jackson, and they still desire to carry into practical effect the principles by which the Gen. Jackson professed to be governed. They feel and know the imminent danger which threatens the country, in the increased stress of the patronage of office. They see, and well admit, that the office holders are "abroad in the land." But for effective holding power being equal in every third man of three horses. For instance, the power of a ten-horse steam engine is equal to the force exerted by fifteen horses acting together; and if the engine is double, eight and a half, while each horse can only work during eight hours out of the twenty-four. It will really perform the work of forty-five horses; for it would require that number of horses to be kept to execute the same quantity of work. Any statement of the comparative cost of steam, horse, and manual labor, can be, of course, only an approximation to the truth, as this cost must necessarily depend on the prices of fuel consumed by steam-engines, and on the expense of [illegible] year and year, of the keep of horses, and of the wages of manual labor—and of [illegible] with circumstances, and likewise on the [illegible] proportion. Data for calculation, however, have been given by distinguished engineers. It is estimated that a heavy [illegible] ten hours, will consume 16 pounds of coal and 14 pounds of hay in the same time. A steam engine of thirty-horse power, working ten hours, will consume about 2000 pounds of coal, or, as nearly as possible, one chaldron of New Castle coals.

From the same.

CROWS' HEADS.

A premium on crows' heads [illegible] as well as a dead shot in the [illegible] of that state to every person, [illegible] a certain number, induced me, a few days since, to go near a piece of wood-land, where [illegible] to feed on a suitable [illegible] in search of [illegible] himself. His cautious movements [illegible] of the decoy. Flocks of crows visited and feasted upon the [illegible], when the farmer was absent from his retreat, but whenever he appeared in sight of the field, they took wing, and [illegible] to venture in approach it, although with wishful eyes and watery mouths they [illegible] their favorite repast. Thus matters went on for [illegible] days, and still shaking [illegible], awaited the approach of the wily crows, but not one would [illegible] the field. Many a delicious dead [illegible] that he was there retreated. Discouraged by [illegible] want of success, he visited the circumstance to a neighbor, who [illegible] informed him that he was successful in shooting them, while [illegible] discomfited friend had very strong doubtings about. However, they both [illegible] with the [illegible] of the brush-house, and, after a short time, the neighbor reported his [illegible] friend to take his gun with him and [illegible] the field towards his house, and [illegible] as he was out of shooting distance from the animal, down came the crows to their repast. And the sagacious firing amongst them, killed a large number. The farmer, seeing his friend's success, returned to him and observed, "the crows are cunning critters, but they can't beat us." Z.

THINGS THAT I LIKE TO SEE.

I like to see a farmer and his family neatly and substantially dressed; with [illegible] especial adaptation in their business; [illegible] dulgence in the luxuries of life; [illegible] people, worthy of your confidence and respect.

I like to see neatness and taste displayed about a farm house, barn, outbuildings, fencing, &c. A small portion of ornamental and [illegible] fruit trees and shrubs tastefully arranged about the domicil; it shows the proprietor to be a man of taste, possessed of mind and heart, and especially filled with humbugs.

I like to see a family of obedient, industrious children, ever willing to oblige one another; it indicates that the parents have taken a duty impressed with a proper regard for their present and future welfare.

I like to see boys helpful and attentive to their sisters, being ever ready to lessen their burdens and to promote their happiness; it shows good breeding, and argues strongly their future success in life.

I like to see kindness, gentleness and humanity extended to domestic animals; it forbearance, strong presumptive proof that he is a [illegible] man, and one from whom, [illegible] be expected to receive kind and [illegible].

I like to see a garden well filled with all the vegetables of the season, of the best kind, and cultivated in the best manner; it argues a proper regard to the interest and comfort of a family; and a pretty good judgment may be formed from it, of the industry, economy and [illegible] of the husband. For it is said a very good man seldom or never has a very bad garden.

REES.

Business is not to very bad. On Monday fifteen vessels arrived from foreign ports. Coasting business was pretty more extensive, more successful. Yesterday [illegible] three more vessels from foreign parts. It looks quite like old times.—Boston Post.

The Chemical Bank, New York, was broken into on Thursday night—after breaking open the outer doors, which were very strong and piercing several legs with [illegible] they reached the vault, and [illegible] about $1,000 in specie, and a dollar's worth of cents.

The Baltimore Temperance Recorder [illegible] tated the 4th in the Carroll [illegible]

Mr. Buchanan! In this way, the cost of that mission has been inordinately increased, and it is high time that this drain on the public Treasury for private benefit should be checked.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Steam—Engines.—Engineers estimate the force of steam-engines by a figurative which they term the horse-power. This power is the force required to raise or move 550 cubic feet of water, which is equivalent to 33,000 pounds through one foot high in a minute. The power of a man might be assumed equal to that of raising 60 cubic feet, which weighs 3750 pounds avoir, through the space or height of one foot in a minute, or a proportionate weight to any other height, as that the height multiplied by the weight may give the product 33,000 pounds. A stout laborer will continue to work at this rate during eight hours per day. A day's labor of a man working this continuously, therefore, may be reckoned at 25,000 cubic feet of water being raised one foot high; and in this proportion a one-hundred-and-four, two-horse power is equal to the power of about nine thousand men. The horse-power of the steam-engine, thus assumed, is beyond the usual power of an ordinary horse, a two-horse power being equal in reality to but three of three horses. For instance, the power of a ten-horse steam engine is equal to the force exerted by fifteen horses acting together; and if the engine is double, eight and a half, while each horse can only work during eight hours out of the twenty-four. It will really perform the work of forty-five horses; for it would require that number of horses to be kept to execute the same quantity of work. Any statement of the comparative cost of steam, horse, and manual labor, can be, of course, only an approximation to the truth, as this cost must necessarily depend on the prices of fuel consumed by steam-engines, and on the expense of [illegible] year and year, of the keep of horses, and of the wages of manual labor—and of [illegible] with circumstances, and likewise on the [illegible] proportion. Data for calculation, however, have been given by distinguished engineers. It is estimated that a heavy [illegible] ten hours, will consume 16 pounds of coal and 14 pounds of hay in the same time. A steam engine of thirty-horse power, working ten hours, will consume about 2000 pounds of coal, or, as nearly as possible, one chaldron of New Castle coals.

CROWS' HEADS.

A premium on crows' heads [illegible] as well as a dead shot in the [illegible] of that state to every person, [illegible] a certain number, induced me, a few days since, to go near a piece of wood-land, where he [illegible] to feed on a suitable [illegible] in search of [illegible] himself. His cautious movements [illegible] of the decoy. Flocks of crows visited and feasted upon the [illegible], when the farmer was absent from his retreat, but whenever he appeared in sight of the field, they took wing, and [illegible] to venture in approach it, although with wishful eyes and watery mouths they [illegible] their favorite repast. Thus matters went on for [illegible] days, and still shaking [illegible], awaited the approach of the wily crows, but not one would [illegible] the field. Many a delicious dead [illegible] that he was there retreated. Discouraged by [illegible] want of success, he visited the circumstance to a neighbor, who [illegible] informed him that he was successful in shooting them, while [illegible] discomfited friend had very strong doubtings about. However, they both [illegible] with the [illegible] of the brush-house, and, after a short time, the neighbor reported his [illegible] friend to take his gun with him and [illegible] the field towards his house, and [illegible] as he was out of shooting distance from the animal, down came the crows to their repast. And the sagacious firing amongst them, killed a large number. The farmer, seeing his friend's success, returned to him and observed, "the crows are cunning critters, but they can't beat us." Z.

THINGS THAT I LIKE TO SEE.

I like to see a farmer and his family neatly and substantially dressed; with [illegible] especial adaptation in their business; [illegible] dulgence in the luxuries of life; [illegible] people, worthy of your confidence and respect.

I like to see neatness and taste displayed about a farm house, barn, outbuildings, fencing, &c. A small portion of ornamental and [illegible] fruit trees and shrubs tastefully arranged about the domicil; it shows the proprietor, to be a man of taste, possessed of mind and heart, and especially filled with humbugs.

I like to see a family of obedient, industrious children, ever willing to oblige one another; it indicates that the parents have taken a duty impressed with a proper regard for their present and future welfare.

I like to see boys helpful and attentive to their sisters, being ever ready to lessen their burdens and to promote their happiness; it shows good breeding, and argues strongly their future success in life.

I like to see kindness, gentleness and humanity extended to domestic animals; it forbearance, strong presumptive proof that he is a [illegible] man, and one from whom, [illegible] be expected to receive kind and [illegible].

I like to see a garden well filled with all the vegetables of the season, of the best kind, and cultivated in the best manner; it argues a proper regard to the interest and comfort of a family; and a pretty good judgment may be formed from it, of the industry, economy and [illegible] of the husband. For it is said a very good man seldom or never has a very bad garden.

Business is not to very bad. On Monday fifteen vessels arrived from foreign ports. Coasting business was pretty more extensive, more successful. Yesterday [illegible] three more vessels from foreign parts. It looks quite like old times.—Boston Post.

POETICAL.

The Bower of Prayer.

To leave my dear friends, and from neighbors to part,
And go from my home! it affects not my heart,
Like the thoughts of absenting myself for a day
From that blest retreat where I've chosen to pray.

Sweet bower! where the pine and the poplar have spread,
And woven their branches a roof for my head;
How oft have I knelt in the ever green bower,
And poured out my soul to my Savior in prayer!

The early shrill notes of the loved nightingale,
That dwelt in the bower, I observed as my bell
To call me to duty, while birds of the air
Sung anthems of praise as I went to prayer.

How sweet were the zephyrs perfumed by the pine!
The ivy, the balsam, the wild eglantine!
But sweeter, oh! sweeter, superlative were
The joys which I've tasted in answer to prayer.

For Jesus, my Savior, oft deigned there to meet,
And bless with his presence my lonely retreat,—
Oft filled me with raptures and blessedness there,
Indicing in heaven's own language my prayer.

Dear bower! I must leave you and bid you adieu,
And pay my devotions in parts that are new;
Well knowing my Savior resides every where,
And can in all places give answer to prayer.

Sweet spirit attend me wherever I go,
The will of the Savior forever to know.
And when I cease praying to Jesus above,
I'll never cease praising in mansions of love.

The Consolation of a Wife to her Husband.

No more, loved partner of my soul,
At disappointments grieve,
Can flowing tears our fate control,
Or ought our woes relieve;

Adversity is virtue's school,
To those who right discern;
Let us observe each painful rule,
And each hard lesson learn.

If fixed the strong foundation lie,
The castle braves the storm.
Thus fixed on Faith's unfailing rock,
Let us endure awhile
Misfortune's rude impetuous shock,
And glory in our toil.

Ill fortune cannot always last;
Or, tho' it should remain,
Yet wreck-ful mournful moment haste,
A better world to gain—

Where calumny no more shall wound,
Nor faithless friends destroy;
Where innocence and truth are crowned
With never-fading joy. CELINDA.

An Orphan's Letter to the Savior.

A young lad of C—, in Germany, had just lost his father, and by the sad event found himself without the means of continuing his education. His great desire was to enter into a school founded by the pious christians known by the name of Moravians. This was also the wish of his mother. But one who is destitute of money, or friends, or patronage, poor and unknown, has little to expect in this world. Happily for the young orphan, he had heard of Him who "is rich to all them that call upon him"—of the friend of the unfortunate—of the great and mighty Lord who disposes of the gold and silver as he does of hearts, according to his good pleasure—of Jesus, who has said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The boy reposed the most implicit confidence in this gracious Savior. He believed in him, and he felt strongly impelled to apply to him. But how to go to him? said the young orphan; I will just write him a letter in which I will tell him the whole. This he did in nearly these words:

"My Dear Lord Jesus Christ! I have lost my father, we are very poor. But to thee hast said in thy word, that whatsoever we ask of God in thy name, he will give it us. I believe what thou hast said, Lord Jesus. I pray thee, my God, in the name of Jesus, to supply my mother the means of placing me in the Moravian Institute. I want so much to go on with my education. I pray thee, therefore, good Jesus, do this. I love thee, already; but I shall love thee afterwards still more. Give wisdom and every good thing," &c.

He folded the letter and directed it to our Lord Jesus Christ in Heaven—then, his heart joyful with hope he carried it to the Post Office. The Post Master, seeing the superscription, supposed it was written by some distracted person, and cast it aside. When his work was done, however, he took it again and examined the handwriting, and observed it was that of a child. He opened it, and was much affected at reading this infantile prayer, which he communicated to a Moravian of his acquaintance. The latter read it at a meeting of the Brethren. The Baron de la Lippe who was present, thought he saw in the circumstance an appeal addressed to him by our Savior. He took the orphan under his protection, and placed him in the Institute he had desired. Thus was the petition of the boy immediately granted.—Arch du Christ.

The Rail-road Steamer.

BY JAMES JOHNSON, M. D.

Were any of the ancients to rise from their tombs, and behold a steam-ship full of passengers, darting up the Thames, or a train of carriages, with a thousand people, flying along a railroad at the rate of 40 miles an hour, they would be very apt to doubt the fact of their revisit to the same planet they had left—since a thousand years in the grave may probably seem no longer that a short siesta after dinner. Their surprise would not be much lessened, by the sign of a column of brilliant flame springing up from the middle of a street, issuing from ten thousand metalic tubes, and turning the dark, nights of night into the glare of day! If, while gazing at these phenomena, they saw a man or even a monkey descend from the clouds, suspended as the pendulum of a huge umbrella, they would no longer doubt that they had got into another, if not a better world," than that of their birth and death!

But to return to the rail road steamer. Without rudder or rein; without tug or tow-rope; without chart or compass; without impulse from man, or traction from beast, this maximum of power in minimum of space—this magic automaton darts forward, on iron pinion, like an arrow from a bow, along its destined course. Devised by science, but devoted to industry; harmless as the dove, if unopposed; but fatal as the thunderbolt if obstructed in its career; this astonishing offspring of human invention; this giant in strength though a dwarf in stature, drags along, and apparently without effort, whole cargoes of commerce; merchants and their merchandize, artisans and their arts, travellers and their trafic, tourist and their tours (some of them heavy enough)—in short, every thing that can be chained to the tail of this herculean velocipede!

The steam carriage nearly annihilates distance between the inhabitants of a state, and thereby converts, as it were, a whole country into a city securing all the good effects of combination and concentration, without the detrimental consequences of a crowded population. By the railroad, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham and the Metropolis, are constituted contiguous cities, while wide and fertile tracts of country intervene. Thus, steam multiplies the products of human labour, by increasing their sales and diminishing their price. It will enable us to convert millions of acres from pasturage into cornfields, and subsequently the provender of horses into food for man.

The whole transit of a rail-road steamer is a series of miracles, which, in former days, would have been attributed to angels or demons. At starting, the mighty automaton suddenly suppresses his torrent of blazing steam, and belches forth a deep and hollow cough, which is reiterated at shorter and shorter periods, like a huge animal panting for breath, as the engine with its train, labours up the ascent from Euston square. These belchings more nearly resemble the pantings of a lion or tiger, than any other sound I know of. With the slow motion, on any considerable ascent, the breathing of the animated machine appears to become more laborious, and the explosions more distinct, till at length the animal seems exhausted, and groans as he were, under the tremendous effort. But the engine having mastered the difficulty, acquires velocity before it plunges into the dark abyss of the tunnel under Primrose hill. There the peal of thunder; the sudden immersion in Cimmerian darkness; the clash of reverberated sounds in confined space; the atmospheric chill that rushes over the frame; all combine to induce a momentary shudder, as the thought of some possible collision or catastrophe in this subterranean transit, which is increased rather than diminished by the gleams of dubious light that occasionally break in from above, or the sparks of fire that issue every instant from the chimney, rendering "darkness visible." On emerging from the gloomy and gelid cavern, every thing appears of dazzling brightness, and we breathe with delight the pure atmosphere of heaven.

The moment the highest point of elevation of any part of the road is gained, and a descent commences, the engine with its long train, starts off with augmenting velocity, dashing along like lightning, and with an uniform growl or roar, like a continuous discharge of distant artillery or thunder. The scene is now grand—I had almost said terrific. Although it may be a complete calm, the wind appears like a hurricane; and, while the train is flying along the raised embankments, as near Watford, it is impossible not to feel some sense of danger, an apprehension that some unexpected impediment may hurl the whole cavalcade into the yawning gulf below.

The meetings of the trains flying in opposite directions [on double tracks] are scarcely less agitating to the nerves than the transits through the tunnels. The velocity of their course—the propinquity, or apparent identity of the iron trajets along which these hissing meteors move, raise the involuntary but frightful thought of a possible collision, with all its horrible consequences. The period of suspense, however, is but momentary. An electrifying concussion, as it were, of sound, sight and sound takes place, and in a few seconds the object of terror is out of view behind.

But such Herculean labour cannot be carried on in so small a compass, without great expenditure. The automaton thirsts: he knows the places of refreshment: utters a loud and piercing whistle, or note of preparation; slackens his pace halts at the fountain, and ingurgitates a deluge of water, to quench his burning drought. In five minutes he is able to renew his gigantic tasks.

The steam shriek is a new phenomenon on the rail road, and a very startling one it is. By opening a small valve in the boiler, a volume of steam is driven with tremendous force and velocity, through a narrow aperture, in imitation of a throat, causing a shrill shriek, unlike the voice of man, or of any known animal, but so loud as to be heard two miles off. It is a most unearthly yell, or scream, or whistle; which was compared by a distinguished poet, who sat by me to the cry of some monstrous animal in pain, or to death. It forms an excellent alarum to clear the road for the train, and apprise those at the stations, that the engine approaches.

The rail road travelling possesses many peculiarities, as well as advantages, over the common modes of conveyance. The velocity with which the train moves through the air is very refreshing, even in the hottest weather, where the rate is for some miles. The vibratory, or rather oscillatory motion communicated to the carriage frame, is very different from the swinging and rolling motions of the stage coach, and is productive of more salutary effects. It equalizes the circulation, promotes digestion, tranquilizes the nerves [after the open country is gained,] and often causes sound sleep during the succeeding night the exercises of this kind of travelling being accompanied by that lassitude, aching and fatigue, which, in weakly constitutions, prevents the nightly repose. The Rail road bids fair to be a powerful remedial agent in many ailments to which the metropolitan and civic inhabitants are subject.

A pretty good sermon might be preached on the following text. It exhibits a new view of moral accountability; "Three Paisely weavers, whose wives were quartered at Gourock for the season, were anxious to get across the Dunoon on Sabbath morning; deeming it a profanation, however, to employ an oared boat for the purpose, they employed a friend to negotiate with the Captain of the Rothesay, Mail steamer, "to get them a bit of his tow, and tak' them wi' him, as he was gaun down that way at any rate."—"But what's the difference, pray," asked the negotiator, "between rowing over with oars, and by the paddle of a steamer?" "Difference! there's a hantle difference between rowing by the power o'man, who maun answer for what he does, and a water wheel pulling us: in ither words, gin ye wad hae us be mair pointedly particular, a steam engine's no moral being, it's no longer an accountable augent."

First Sight of the Pacific Ocean.—On the morning of the 22d, we waited for a favorable tide until 9 o'clock when we got under way with a brisk wind from the east. Here the river begins to spread out into a bay; but owing to many shoals the navigation is difficult. We ran aground, but the increase of the tide set us afloat again, and a on the Pacific ocean opened to our view. This boundary of the "Far West" was to us an object of great interest; and when I looked upon the dark rolling waves, and reflected upon the vast expanse of 5000 miles, without an interveing island until you arrive at the Japan coast—a stretch of thought was required like contemplating infinity, which can measure only by succession, its expansion and sublimity. Like the vanishing lines of prospects, so is contemplation lost in the extent of ocean.

A Man above Two Hundred Years Old.—The most remarkable instance of longevity which we meet with in British history, is that of Thomas Carn, who according to the parish register of St. Leonard, Shoreditch, died on the 28th of January, 1589 at the astonishing age of 207 years. He was born in the reign of Richard 2d, A. D. 1381, and lived in the reign of twelve kings and queens, viz. Richard 2d, Henry 4th 5th and 6th, Edward 4th and 5th, Richard 3d, Henry 7th and 8th, Edward 6th, Mary and Elizabeth. The authenticity of the statement may be readily ascertained by anyperson who chooses to consult the above register.

The Cherokees.—A letter from Maj. General Scott to the Governor of Tennessee, under date of 22d June says—

I have much pleasure in saying to your Excellency, that of the Cherokees who yet remained in the country, on the 24th ult., probably more than three fourths have already been collected for emigration by the troops under my command. The other fourth, it is expected, will be collected in 8 or 10 days more.

About 3,000 were sent off to the West between the 1st and 16th inst, when, apprehending that the warm season might prove highly injurious to the Indians, I was induced to suspend a further emigration until the first of September next.

In the mean time I propose to hold all the Indians yet to be emigrated, guarded by regular troops, at and around this place, Ross' and Gunter's landing.

Gen. Scott adds in a postcript that he had commenced the discharge of the Tennessee Militia under his command.

There was a severe Hail Storm at Peapack on the 4th, which prostrated much grain. Fruit trees, fences, and out buildings were torn up by the wind, and rain and hail fell in torrents. The shower rose just as a large party had set down to a public dinner under a bower in the woods.

☞ Healthy City.—Only one death in Cincinnati during the week ending the 4th, and that an infant. This was the only death within three weeks!

The plea usually employed by the advocates of horse racing, is that it improves the breed of horses. The proprietors of the Bo acon course near Jersey City, have offered a variety of purses, for a series of races by human beings. The argument in favor of this, says the Jersey City Advertiser, is probably that it improves the breed of men!

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

The writer in the last week's Union who styles himself "A Friend of Abolition," is unquestionably a person of great kindness and liberality; for no sooner is he convinced that a person is worthy of notice, than he sees he has it. Animated by this generous spirit, he has brought to "public notice" a gentleman who made some remarks at the meeting held in the Baptist church on the 4th inst, and after courteously advising him to "hide his face with shame" for the falsehoods he there uttered—modestly proposes to give him an opportunity to correct his "gross errors," and condescendingly promises him every "proper attention." But I trust the gentleman thus pompously challenged, has too much regard for truth and himself, to engage in a controversy with an anonymous scribler who has shown himself destitute of all those qualities that can make such a discussion respectable. Nor do I take up my pen to defend a single opinion of the speaker who is thus made the object of "public notice;" my only object is to show that he has been most grossly misrepresented by the writer in question. In the first place, the writer says that the gentleman charged the abolitionists "with being the sole causes of the mobs which have disgraced some of our most populous cities." I deny it. He said no such thing. He did accuse them of being in many instances unnecessarily the occasion of riots, by their rash and extravagant conduct, and consequently chargeable for many of the evils which they, at such times, produce. Whether this be a tenable position or not, I neither affirm or deny, all I say is that it was the position assumed by the speaker, and that the version given by "a Friend of Abolition," is a gross misrepresentation.

But, continues the writer, "a charge more foolish than the rest was, that they could never accomplish their object, i.e. the abolition of slavery." Now whether this "charge," if it had been made, would have been so very "foolish," I very much doubt, but that is nothing to the purpose,—it was not made. The speaker made no such remark, nor was there an expression that implied a sentiment of that kind. The only thing he said, that had the least approximation to such an idea, was, that the whites and blacks could never be placed on an equal footing in this country.

And now I appeal to "every unprejudiced mind," to say who it is that has made "observations averse to truth," and who it is that should "hide his face with shame." He also charged the gentleman with a want of "proper regard for those advocates of liberty and equal rights," viz, abolitionists. But how was this want of "proper regard," exhibited? By denouncing them as villains and traitors? No. He did not question their motives at all. He explicitly declared that he believed them to be good and patriotic men; but he thought that their acts were highly injurious to the slave, and dangerous to the prosperity of the country, and so thinking, he mildly and respectfully endeavored to show the evil effects of their society. What was there in this, that exhibited a want of "proper respect for that sentiment of our forefathers, all men are created equal,"—or of a "regard" for abolitionists?—Must the right of free discussion be confined to the advocates of Anti-slavery—may they denounce at all their meetings, and through all their publications, colonization as a vain and futile affair, as a system "that is rotten at the very core," —and must we be denied the privilege of saying a word in our defence, or if we do, be told to "hide our heads with shame," for our presumption?

But I have occupied too much of your time already, and yet allow me to say before concluding, that this is the only notice which "a Friend to Abolition," shall receive from me, whatever he may choose to write hereafter. Yours, &c.

A FRIEND TO TRUTH.

We heard of several sudden deaths yesterday, by the drinking of cold water from the pumps. One man fell dead in West Broadway, near Beach st. between 7 and 8 o'clock. About 10 o'clock, a woman, apparently a German, about 40 years of age, fell on the steps of 150 Hudson street, and was carried insensible to one of the upper watchhouses.

Alexander Beck, aged 48, a porter in the Boston and New York Transportation Company's office, died yesterday morning from the effects of drinking cold water.

John McCormick, a laborer, died very suddenly at his boarding house in Rose st., yesterday His death is supposed to have been caused by drinking cold water.

An unknown Irishman, by occupation a garden er, was found dead yesterday at the corner of 71st st, and 5th Avenue.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, July 17, 1838.

For I have always upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Closing Proceedings of Congress.—On Friday evening, the Senate bill, imposing a fine of $10,000 on the trustees, &c. for circulating the bills of the old bank of the United States, came up. Messrs. Wise and Prentiss vehemently opposed it: it nevertheless passed, 87 to 79.

The Senate bill to sell the U. S. bank bonds also passed. The House adjourned at 11.

On Saturday, much business was done. The Senate continued in Session until 4 o'clock Sabbath morning, and the house 4 hours later. Much difficulty was experienced in keeping a quorum, and several members were fined for absence. Among the bills passed were the following:

For the expenses incurred in the erection of the territory of Iowa.

For the investment in State funds of the amount of the proceeds of the Smithsonian legacy, until Congress shall think proper to appropriate it to the purposes for which it was devised.

For the settlement of the claims of the state of New York for expenses incurred for militia service during the late disturbances on the northern frontier of that state.

The following is a part of a bill which passed, referring to this state, the remaining portion relates to other states.

For the erection of a beacon light at the Corner Stake, so called, between Elizabethtown point and Shorter's Island; also another small light or lantern on Shorter's Island; also for buoys, &c., at the following places; a spar buoy at Bergen point; a spar buoy at the Mill Rocks in Newark Bay; a spar buoy on the first oyster bed or point of the bar between the Hackensack and Passaic channels, and a half mile below the crossing place; a spar buoy at the Corner Stake so called; a spar buoy at the elbow; all pursuant to the report of Captains Kearney, Sloat and Perry, $3,400

The Express Mail, was saved in the Senate by a majority of 6; it is thought, however, that it will be abandoned by the Post master General.

On Monday, both houses adjourned till December, at noon, after the transaction of some unimportant business. Thus ended a very long session, in which but little was done.

A State Colonization Convention met at Trenton on Tuesday afternoon last, for the purpose of forming a State Society. The society was organized on the 11th,—Hon Theodore Frelinghuysen was chosen President, and seventeen Vice Presidents were appointed, one for each county in the state.

We learn from the Newark Eagle that all the boot and shoe makers in that city are fully employed, and at an advance of wages. We also learn from other sources that business in New York has much revived, and is once more very lively. We trust that we shall soon feel the impulse here.

It gives us much pleasure to state that the Philadelphia banks have agreed, by a vote of 10 to 4, to resume specie payments on the 1st of August,—in about two weeks. The four banks which opposed were the U. S. bank, Schuylkill, Pennsylvania, and N. America; and they will also probably unite with the others at the appointed time. This is a very important movement, which will soon be followed by the resumption of all the banks of the Union. The return to prosperity is now fairly commenced and no thanks to Congress or Mr. Biddle.

Patterson, in this state, has been much infested with mad dogs for a month or two past.—Many cattle have been bitten and killed, and one boy has been bitten, with what effect is not yet known.

The present number of the "Union," concludes the half of the 2d volume. All who pay their subscription this week, and who have not paid heretofore, will thereby save 25 cents, according to our terms, which will be adhered to.

We have nothing especial from Canada. The insurrection is not yet put down, though the British have 16,000 regular troops there, and even that is not sufficient to keep the turbulent populace in order, but the militia has been called out, in many instances. We do not suppose that the insurgents can number much over a thousand armed men, but the people are generally much dissatisfied, and a complete suppression of hostilities in those provinces will, we fear, cost much more than they are worth to her Britanic Majesty.

In our quiet village and the cause of the Colonization of the free blacks of our country on the African coast. A meeting was held on the 4th inst. for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of forming a society here. Against the object of this meeting we have nothing to say, but, if we have been rightly informed as to what was said at the meeting, we respectfully beg leave to differ from some of the speakers. We have heard that many things were said against the Anti-Slavery society and abolitionists. Why, pray? The object of the meeting was to form a Colonization, not an Anti-Abolition Society, and would it not have been better to have attended solely to the business in hand, rather than to meddle with other things, to the injury of the feelings of many good men, when there was no occasion.

We heard of one expression at the meeting, which we deem unworty of further notice than repeating it, viz: that the principles of the Anti-Slavery society were from the bottomless pit. We believe also that something was said of the ultimate failure of that society in its object. Every man has a right to his own opinion on that subject,—many able and pious men, however, think it will not fail. In England it has not failed—the experiment of entire and instantaneous abolition of Slavery has been there tried, and with the greatest success. Why will not the efforts of the abolitionists be here also crowned with ultimate success? But what had all this to do with the organization of a Colonization society?—We wish to condemn intolerence, whether or not any was exhibited at the meeting referred to. Let the two societies attend each to their own business respectively, and let the other alone; for both the anti-slavery and colonization societies encroach unwarrantably upon this rule.

An adjourned meeting took place on Monday evening of last week, and we were glad to hear that a very liberal constitution was adopted, more denunciatory of Slavery than of Anti-Slavery.

We are well aware that many things stated above may be incorrect as we were not present, but our informants are men that can be depended upon.

The Jersey City Advertiser, by the way one one of the best papers in the state, has the following capital paragraph in its prospectus,

We have mentioned the subject of religion.—We trust no one will be alarmed with the apprehension of being sermonized unseasonably and unreasonably through our columns, for it is not our design to make a pulpit of our desk, but we propose to be guided by religious principles ourselves, and we expect to have among our readers such as are like minded with us, and they have a right equally with any other class of subscribers to have their taste and feelings consulted. We are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, and would place ourselves in no situation incompatible with it. Of course, our paper will be an advocate of strict temperance; our only drink is cold water, and we can recommend it to every one else as the best and only safe beverage.

☞ Representatives in Congress are to be chosen in the following fourteen states this summer and fall, and the elections commence on the following days in the several States respectively,

Louisiana, 1st Monday in July.
Illinois, 1st Monday in August.
Missouri, same day.
Vermont, 1st Tuesday in September.
Maine, 2d Monday in September.
Georgia, 1st Monday in October.
Arkansas, same day.
South Carolina, 2nd Monday in October.
New Jersey, 2d Tuesday in October.
Pennsylvania, same day.
Ohio, same day.
New York, 1st Monday in November.
Massachusetts, 2d Monday in November,
Delaware, 2d Tuesday in November.

Commencement of Rutger's College at New Brunswick, will be celebrated to morrow, 18th inst. at 10 o'clock, A. M. This afternoon, at 3 o'clock, an oration will be delivered by the Hon. Alexander H. Everett, of Massachusetts, before the Peithosophian and Philoclean Societies.

This evening at 7, the usual Junior orations will be delivered.

We would advise all who conveniently can to attend.—The distance is small, and they will unquestionably have a rich treat.

We have received a communication from a "Subscriber," commenting on an article in our last paper from the United States Gazette, in which it is stated that there are no women in the United States. We have hardly room for it, but will give its principal contents. "A Subscriber" acknowledges that there are females in this country, who deserve the censure given; but that there are also many real ladies among us, and many women, whom he supposes that the Englishmen mistook for ladies on account of the neatness of their dress, while engaged in domestic occupations. He also gives the dandies a smart knock.

The fields around Gilbertsville, Otsego co. N. Y. were laid waste by a 20 minutes hail storm, on Tuesday afternoon—the crops, trees, &c. prostrated. The window glass was universally destroyed.

God. [illegible] issued a proclamation requiring all the banks of that state to resume specie payments on the 12th of August next, or forfeit their charters. He also requires that all the shinplasters be immediately redeemed, whether redeemable or not, at present. He attributes the pressure to the conduct of the General Government, upon which he is very severe.

The June Term of the circuit, and the Court of Oyer and Terminer, at Newark terminated last Thursday. Four persons were fined, with costs, for selling spirituous liquors, amounting in all to two or three hundred dollars. Very good.

Two packets, one from Havre, and one from Liverpool, arrived at New York, on Friday last, bringing intelligence six days later. Nothing, however, of importance. The English are about establishing a colony in New Zealand. The Royal William, the first steam ship from Liverpool to New York, was to leave July 5th. She is distinguished for speed, and will soon be here.

A great Whig Convention of young men from all parts of the state, was held in Utica last Wednesday. 2 or 3,000 were present. Thurlow Weed was there with 40,000 copies of Mr. Bond's speech.

The New Jersey Rail Road Company have declared a dividend of 3 per cent. payable 10th inst.

The President and senate made at the last hour the 173 promotions and appointments provided for in the act to increase the army.

Correspondence of N. Y. American.
Washington, July 9, 1838.

A Regular Set-to in Congress.

Yesterday (Sunday morning) Messrs, Campbell and Maury, of Tennessee, had a pugilistic encounter in the House, a few minutes after it adjourned. They were much bruised, and each received a brace of black eyes. The circumstances were as follows; It appears that early on Sunday morning, Mr Maury was very active in procuring a call of the House, in order to show to the country who were the delinquents. Mr. Campbell was among the absentees, and was brought to the bar with the rest in custody of the Sergeant at Arms. At 8 o'clock, when the House adjourned, the latter went to his colleague and reproached him for his conduct in aiding the call, at the same time alleging that Mr. M. had done it with a view to injure him (Mr. C.) at home among his constituents. Crimination and recrimination followed, and each gentleman bandied his opponent with the epithet of 'liar,' 'scoundrel,' &c. As might be expected, a personal conflict was the result, and blows were bestowed in abundance Not more than five members remained when the fracas commenced, and they of course did not attempt to interfere. After the belligerents had belaboured each other to their hearts content, they suspended hostilities, retired to their respective homes, and have not been seen since. It is said they are so well satisfied with their mutual inflictions, that no doubts are entertained as to further proceedings.

New Jersey Mineral Spring.—The "Spa Spring," at Woodbridge, the Jersey city Advertiser says is becoming a popular place of resort. The pure medicinal quality of the water, its pleasantness to the taste, and its healing properties, place it in rank beside Ballston and Saratoga.

The old Directors of the New York Phenix bank were re-elected on Tuesday by a large majority. Mr. Delafield has declined to take his seat, and it is said, intends to open a private bank.

A writer in the New York Journal of Commerce estimates the area of all the European nations at 3,194,453 square miles; the number of inhabitants at 234,000,000, national debt $6,000,000,000, amount of specie $1,800,000,000.

United States 2,000,000 square miles, 17,000,000 inhabitants, national debt none. Individual States' debt $100,000,000; and specie estimated at $70,000,000: or $34 of specie or solid currency per individual in Europe, and $10 of specie and solid currency per individual in the United States.

A great sale of Durham cattle by Mr. C. S. Clarkson of Cincinnati, on the 1st inst. produced some extraordinary prices. Sixty cows, bulls, and calves were sold for an aggregate of upwards of $20,000. One cow with a calf four weeks old, brought $1,075 a twelve year old cow $1000; a 6 year old $975. Prices ranged from those sums down to $95 for a calf. One three year old brought $1450.

The ravages of the yellow striped bug on cucumbers and melons may be effectually prevented by sifting charcoal dust over the plants. If repeated two or three times, the plants may be entirely free from any annoyance. There is in charcoal some properties so obnoxious to these troublesome insects, that they fly from it the instant it is applied.

The bark Ella Hand at Philadelphia from New Orleans, has on board $100,000 in specie for the U. S. Bank.

Times in St. Louis.—According to the Bulletin, affairs are brightening up in St. Louis considerably. Several elegant buildings are in progress, and preparations making for many more; strangers are daily arriving, and the demand for rooms, stores, and dwellings, is as great as at any former period. The editor says—"We look upon the future with good spirits, and our citizens feel confident that prosperity will again attend us."

A man fell from a steam boat on the North river, the other day, while asleep, and was in the water two hours, the New York papers say, before he woke up.

Factory.

THE Subscriber will receive proposals at the office of the Elizabethtown and Somerville Rail Road Company, in Elizabethtown; and at the store of C. & J. CORY, in Newark, until 12 o'clock, M. on Monday, the 23d day of July instant, for the TRANSPORTATION of the Timber for the Bridges on said Road. The Timber is to be sills, three inch Hemlock plank, and pallour rails, to be transported from Elizabeth-port; and the Cross ties, from the Elizabethtown creek, between Hatfield's dock and the bridge over the creek, and delivered along the line of the road. The proposals will be received for the delivery in mile sections, by the ton per mile; the first mile to commence at J. Seiple's in Elizabethtown, and to be succeeded by mile sections numbering from 1 to 13, ending at Plainfield.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume of the

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the Boston Poet, engraved by Dalton, from a picture by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on steel, by the same artist, designed and engraved expressly for this work. Drawings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare beautiful and popular music, arranged for the piano-forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the reading public, including original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—miscellaneous and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this publication—upon the various productions in the fine arts—and a correct list for the notice and approbation of the public—elegante and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the noted drama and other amusements—criticisms from the best new works in other languages—French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals—discoveries and improvements in science, art, and chanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the publisher, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, and will consists, as heretofore, of contributions from Messrs. Morris, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary contents, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for it is now extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or money shall be spared to render it, in all respects, a work of the highest order, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegantliterature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single line that can bring a blush of shame unbidden upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpareil type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, &c. For each volume, a copious and Explanatory Table of Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. Subscriptions will be received by the carriers now residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers can be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Cabinet Making.

THE Subscribers respectfully informs his friends and the public that he continues the above business at his old stand, and is prepared to execute orders in his line at short notice.

☞ All kinds of Small and Fancy Turning done at short notice. MIRON GOLMSTED.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings of the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the same time, there is probably no institution whose claims will not be found to be known by every American person. Combining the influence of probably 500 societies, generally behind no others for moral worth and high and holy purpose, the Anti-Slavery cause will not fail to have a mighty power for weal or woe. Were here its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatives of very free institutions. Regarded as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any effort to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

In this view, we are led to urge on a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Address 143 Nassau street.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 3d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$3 to $4.00
" " Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2 25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. References and further information given on application. Horatio Bryant

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is a graduate of Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and inclination to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

of the Board of Trustees.

AS I have taken wholly upon myself the Lower Mills in Plainfield, which is now owned by Geo. Wells, and has been formerly occupied by Wm. Wells, it is my expectation to Custom work, particularly. Those favoring me with their custom will be thankfully received and punctually attended to. It is my intention to keep constantly on hand, a good Stock of good quality, and of all kinds, for sale, for cash.

As the public well know, as I am well aware myself of the difficulty attending keeping Books or trusting, and as promises are so fashionable with those of paying tomorrow, and as tomorrow constantly puts them off with them, I am determined to sell for cash or in exchange for grain.

It is my expectation to be found at or near the Mill at all times and reasonable seasons. Sewards Day excepted, as I consider that day to be the Sabbath, and intend to observe it as such. PHINEAS RANDOLPH.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and not an instance can occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in numerous cases, they have proved a perfect cure.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellence is their universality. Complaints, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or derangement in any of the internal organs, cannot be easily those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by both sexes, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any case. Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matter they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise arterial action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at this Office where the Pills are for sale. 1tf

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in removing the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much opposed, since having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and effective cathartic, and capacity adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced the [illegible] many complaints as recommended—especially [illegible] have proven to which one of my family [illegible] afflicted with [illegible] hours, and after taking your pills was entirely well and a [illegible] health. I will soon get [illegible] the likeliness after hearing [illegible] of consuming pain or sickness [illegible] in six days every case pronounced [illegible] hand-books as dispensed [illegible] effectual cure.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

The design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its end of aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and this rule they must assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation, and of ample exposure to the sun, and easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

Speech of Mr. Bond, of Ohio

Upon the resolution to correct abuses in the public Expenditures, and to separate the Government from the Press.—In the House, April, 1838.

(Concluded.)

Sir, has not the country been disappointed? Have not the people been deceived by vain promises? Has not Executive patronage inordinately increased, and is it not still unrestrained? Is not the power every where abused and perverted? Do not the expenses of the general government far transcend in amount all our past history? Why are these things so, and why has not this plague been stayed, Mr. Speaker, according to your plighted faith? I will tell you why, sir, but I prefer to do so in the language of Mr. Buchanan, before referred to. In his speech already alluded to he thus exclaimed:—"The very possession of power has a strong tendency to corrupt the heart; and the man who in humble life was pure and just, has often been transformed by the possession of power into a monster. In the sacred book we find a happy illustration of this. When Hazael came to consult Elisha whether his master, the king of Syria, would recover from a dangerous illness, the prophet looking through the vista of futurity, saw the crimes of which the messenger would be guilty, and he wept. Hazael asked, 'why weepeth my lord?' The prophet then recounted to him the murders and cruelties he would commit against the children of Israel. Hazael, in virtuous indignation replied 'is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?' And Elisha answered, 'The Lord hath shown me that thou shalt be king over Syria.' This man afterwards became king by the murder of his master, and was guilty of enormities, the bare recital of which would make us shudder."

How true, and alas how applicable is this sacred illustration to those who invoked its use in elevating themselves to power!

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, some inspired Elisha had been present when you and Mr. Buchanan, with others, engaged in the debate referred to, and, moved by the sympathetic tear of the prophet you had asked, "Why weepeth my lord?" how would you have been astonished in being then told what the people have since realized.

Imagine sir, the inspired one looking through the vista of a few brief years and saying, you will be placed in power, but will greatly increase the amount of all public expenditures. You will use the offices and patronage of the country for private and not for public good. You will create offices for favorites. You will enlarge all Executive power. You will deny the right to call for reasons on a removal from office, and in a few years will remove more than 1,500 persons from office for opinion's sake! You will derange and corrupt the Post Office Department, which you now admit to be sound, and you will not refrain from any of your designated abuses in the other Departments. You will appoint more members of Congress to office in four years than has been done in all the past history of the Government. Your bill for the abolition of the power and patronage over the Press will sleep the sleep of death. You will retain "the press, the post office, the armed force, and the appointing power in the hands of the President, and will not suffer them to change position and take post on the side of the People." You now censure a small appropriation to purchase some additional furniture for the President's house, but you will furnish that house in luxurious style for General Jackson, who will be succeeded by Mr. Van Buren, and he, not content with the second hand furniture of his predecessor, will cast it off and make his entry into that edifice, with an appropriation of $7,300 for alterations of the house and superintendence of the grounds and another appropriation of $20,000 for new furniture; and this too, in the very year when your public treasury will be bankrupt. You will increase the expenses of foreign missions and suffer your ministers to return home on such brief service as will show their appointments to have been made for individual gain rather than public good. You will increase the contingent expenses of this House from $80,000, to $210,000. You will add to the like expenses of the Senate and to all other public expenditures in the same ratio; and the sum total for the whole civil list of the Government, which is now $13,163,438, will be increased under your boasted reform until it shall exceed thirty millions per year! You will even question the right of a department to purchase a likeness of Washington, and will order a gallery room in all the departments with portraits of Martin Van Buren. You will by means of "office holders," the "enlisted soldiers," bring the patronage of the general government into conflict with the freedom of elections, and you will resist the bill to secure the freedom of those elections. You, Mr. Randolph, will go upon what you now call a "slaveless errand," and after saluting the emperor of Russia, will make a pleasant sojourn in England, and, returning to your estate in Virginia, "You, Mr. Buchanan, will become an office holder and enlisted soldier," go on this very mission to Russia, and will pocket $18,000 for a year's service. You, Mr. Cambreleng will oppose a vote against the measure you now recommend, for reducing the pay of members. You, Mr. Stevenson, will be made speaker, and appoint its committees, with the promise of a foreign mission in your pocket. You Mr. Benton, will vote to lay on the table the bill which you now report to rate the patronage of the press from the Government, and your report on Executive patronage, with its six accompanying bills so imposingly introduced, will prove to have been but as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals!" You Mr. Van Buren, when now, report a bill requiring reasons to be assigned for removing an incumbent from office, will be made Secretary of State, and in due time President, but, from the moment you obtain power, you will forget your professions to be governed by such principles. You Mr. Dickerson, also a member of this committee, will be made Secretary of the Navy; but the Department will be so mismanaged under your direction, that it will be truly said of you on the floor of Congress, "there is none so poor as to do her reverence." You Mr. Woodbury, will take first the Navy and then the Treasury Department, and under your supervision, an attempt to humbug the People with the promise of an exclusive hard money currency will result in the banishment of all specie, a bankrupt Treasury, and a circulation of shinplasters and Treasury notes.

Imagine, then Mr. Speaker such a response to have been made at the period of time which I have suggested. What would have been your reply and what would Mr. Buchanan, who made the scriptural allusion, have said? Methinks I am at see and hear him exclaim, "is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?"

Sir, I fear that in despite of the protestations of Amos Kendall, the promised "reform" was an empty sound," "intended to apply merely to a change of men." But I leave it for this House and for the People of this country to judge whether their confidence has not been betrayed and their hopes disappointed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Deserted City.—We take the following description of the wonderful and long exerted City of Petra from our countryman Stevens' Travels in the East. It is in the valley of Edom (of the Israelites,) near the Dead Sea, and was visited by Mr. S. in 1835.—

This ancient and extraordinary city is situated within a natural amphitheatre of two or three miles in circumference, encompassed on all sides by rugged mountains five or six feet in height. The whole of this area is now a waste of ruins, dwelling houses, palaces, temples, and triumphal arches, all prostrate together in undistinguishable confusion. The sides of the mountains are cut smooth, in a perpendicular direction, and filled with long and continued ranges of dwelling houses, temples and tombs, excavated with vast labor out of the solid rock; and while their summits present a mixture in her wildest and most savage form, their bases are adorned with all the beauty of architecture and art, with columns and porticoes, pediments, and ranges of corridors, enduring as the mountains out of which they are hewn and fresh, as if the work of a generation scarcely yet gone by.

Nothing can be finer than the immense rocky rampart which encloses the city. Strong, firm and immovable as nature itself, it seems to deride the walls of cities, and the puny fortifications of skilful engineers. The only access is by two narrow defiles, practicable only in one place, or by an entrance the most extraordinary that nature, in her wildest freaks has ever framed. The loftiest portals ever raised by the hands of man, the proudest monuments of architectural skill and daring, sink into insignificance by the comparison. It is, perhaps the most wonderful object in the world, except the ruins of the city to which it forms the entrance. Burkhard had been accosted, immediately upon his entry, by the Arab party of Bedouins, and was required to remain but a very short time. I expected a scene of some kind, but at the entrance of the city there was not a creature to dispute our passage; its portals were wide open, and we passed along the stream down into the area, and still no man came to oppose us. We moved to the extreme end of the area; and when at the act of dismounting at the foot of the rock on which stood the temple that had constantly fixed us, we saw one solitary Arab straggling along without any apparent object; a mere wanderer among the ruins; and it was not uninteresting fact that this poor Bedouin was the only living being we saw in the desolate city of Petra. After gazing at us for a few moments from a distance, he came towards us, and in a few moments was sitting down to pipes and coffee with my companions.

Among the ruins is a circular theatre, cut out of the solid rock, containing 33 rows of seats, and capable of holding 3000 people. Although the front part has fallen, and the whole theatre, says Mr. Stevens, is in such a state of preservation, that "if the tenants of the tombs around could once more rise into life, they might take their old places on the seats. Where," he exclaims, "are you, who once sat on the seats of this theatre, the young the high born, the beautiful and brave; who once rejoiced in your riches and power, and lived as if there was no grave, where are ye now? Even the very temple, whose open doors are stretching away in long ranges before the eyes of the wandering traveller cannot reveal your doom. Your dry bones are gone. The robber has invaded your graves, and your very ashes have been swept away to make room for the wandering Arab of the desert."

No description without the aid of plates, can give an adequate conception of the ruins of this wonderful city. Sufficient may be gathered from the preceding account, to convince every reader that Petra was once a populous wealthy and luxurious city, adorned with temples, arches and theatres; and that it was for a thousand years utterly forgotten, and that it is now destitute of a single inhabitant.

The most interesting and important consideration connected with the city is, that its ruins is a distinct fulfilment of several prophecies. Isaiah, Jerimiah, Amos, Joel, Obadiah, and Malachi have announced the desolation of Edom, and some of them in language, which most graphically describes the situation of Petra, as the clefts of the rocks, and in the height of the Hill." Mr. Stevens says; "Amid all the terrific denunciations against the land of Idumea, her cities and the inhabitants thereof, the proud city among the rocks, doubtless for its extraordinary size, was always marked as a subject of extraordinary vengeance. 'I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord, that Bozrah (the strong or fortified city) shall become a desolation, a reproach and a waste and a curse, and all the cities thereof shall be perpetual waste. Lo, I will make thee small among the heathen and despised among men.—Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, holdest the height of the hill; though thou shouldst make thy nest as high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence, saith the Lord." "They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there, and all her princes shall be nothing; and thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof, and it shall be a habitation for dragons, and a court for owls."†

I would that the skeptic could stand as I did, among the ruins of this city among the rocks, and there open the sacred book and read the words of the inspired penman, written when this desolate place was one of the greatest cities in the world.

An Example for young Men.

Engine Factory, Great Western.—We are informed by a friend who speaks from authority, that the manufactory in which the Great Western's engines were made, covers nearly, or quite, three acres of ground, near the east end of Westminster bridge, London; that it employs an average of six hundred workmen and laborers, besides clerks and draughtsmen; the machinery for making steam engines, boilers, and their ponderous work, is competent to effect the work of three thousand men, and with the buildings, is worth about $720,000.

This immense establishment was originated by the the talent of one man, the late Henry Maudsley, Esq. of whose life we have not seen any sketch, but the following may be depended upon, as derived from himself.

His father was of a respectable family in Yorkshire, who became a subaltern officer of the artillery, and the subject of our memoir was born in the royal arsenal, Woolwich, in 1778. His father dying early, leaving a son and two daughters, his mother married again to a man who appears to have been careless of his step-son, for at twelve years of age he found himself an attendant on a common working blacksmith, in Chatham Dockyard. To a common mind this might have been ruin.—to the immense mechanical talent of the youth, it, in the result, proved fortunate. Possessed of a strong mind, great energy, his strength and talent, at eighteen, led him to try London, where he soon obtained employment from a coach smith, who was a friend and contemporary of the late Mr. Bramah, whose locks and hydraulic press have rendered his name so famous. His superior workmanship induced his employer to name young Henry to Mr. Bramah, by whom he was engaged, and by his art in contriving tools for facilitating the work on locks, and many other matters, he soon added to the profits of Mr. Bramah and himself. In a few years, we believe about 1796, his talent, and Mr. Bramah's liberality, introduced Mr. Maudsley to the well known M. J. Brunel; and this was followed by a commencement on his own account, at a convenient set of premises in Margaret street, Cavendish square, where his practical talent, firing and aided by the skill of Brunel, soon led to the acquaintance and confidence of General Bentham, at that time the engineer of the Navy board. Mr. Maudsley was now employed on the construction of telegraphs, block-making machinery, and many other important works for the English Navy; and about 1807—8, this led to a connection with Mr. Robert Dickinson, who had just then taken out an important patent for increasing the means of carrying supplies of water on board ships of war in iron tanks instead of casks; and on an agreement being made with the Navy board for the use of the patent, Mr. Maudsley undertook the contract for making the tanks. This increase of business demanded larger premises, and on the suggestion of the present Joshua Field, Esq., (now a partner in the concern,) then an elève of Brunel's, who had become a member of Mr. Maudsley's establishment, the present location was obtained.

It had been a riding school fitted up at a large cost, ruinous to the owners; but the riding house was made a noble fitting house, while the stables were appropriated to the turners, and additional buildings soon accommodated blacksmiths, tank-makers, iron and brass founders, and pattern makers. And to the death of Mr. Maudsley, in 1831—less we believe since—hardly a year has passed, without some labour saving arrangement, more or less important, being carried into effect within the establishment.

Mr. Maudsley married early in life, and had four sons and two daughters; the latter were married several years before his decease, but his second son, William, died in 1817, of a decline, a bereavement most acutely affected the mind of Mr. Maudsley during the remainder of his life. His third son John, was successfully killed about 1832—3; but his first son, Thomas, and his fourth son Joseph, in conjunction with Mr. Field, before named, are maintaining the character of the concern in the excellence of their manufactures, which are still marked with the names of Maudslay, Sons & Field.

The mechanical arts of the day are indebted to Mr. Maudslay, for originating, or greatly improving, the apparatus attached to large lathes. The iron beds, the eccentric chuck, the universal chuck & the double action slide rest, propelled by a leading screw, were nearly all put in their present most useful forms by him; and if he did not actually originate the application of the leading screw to the cutter blocks of machines for boring large cylinders, (which we believe he did,) he certainly very materially improved the effect of it; and the machinery for cutting screws, and punching tank and boiler plates, invented, but we believe not patented by him, are among the most important additions to our mechanical works of the day. We believe Mr. Maudslay only took out two patents during his life—one for an arrangement of the steam engine, which was much approved, and one for changing the water in sea-going steam boilers; this was in conjunction with Mr. Field, and may be the subject of a notice another day.

The following facts may be interesting. When, in Mr. Maudlay's middle life, he found the coachsmith who had given him his first employ in London, reduced to poverty he pensioned and supported his early friend for the remainder of his life. When one of Mr. Maudslay's neices was about marrying an officer high in the Government service, an examination of the Herald's office, by the bridegroom, elicited the fact, that the bride was entitled to quarter as honorable arms as his own; the records of the office exhibiting a bishop, a law judge, an admiral and a general, among the ancestors of the family: thus proving conjointly with his own successful talent, that he who had been a blacksmith's boy, had been doubly born above his early station in society.—Jour. American Institute.

Morality of the Theatre.—The Polyanthos, a theatrical paper in this city, has found it convenient,—in defending the character of the late Miss Missouri Miller, and assailing that of Hamblin at whose house she died,—to state facts relative to sundry stage actors, which may serve to show what sort of "schools of morals" those are, of which such men are the teachers. The names of four actors are mentioned within the compass of a few lines, as having lived in a state of concubinage, two of them with an actress, and two of them with another woman. Miss Missouri, the Polyanthos says, was free from such crimes, though the circumstances of her birth and education greatly exposed her to become a victim. So of six actors mentioned in the Polyanthos, one appears to have been virtuous quoad hoc, and all the rest vicious. The Polyanthos also hints, that two young women have lost their lives through the intrigues and jealousies of two of the persons above alluded to. Of the correctness or incorrectness of the Polyanthos's statements we know nothing. They are however of so remarkable a character, and afford such an illustration of the immorality of the stage, that we could not pass them over in silence.—Journal of Commerce.

The following advertisement was sent in a manuscript to a printer in one of the Knickerbocker counties in the Empire State:

"Rund away or vos squoolen mine large black horse Cholly. He is plack all oler his body except some vite spots on his pack—but I guessed I got some vite spots in all plack again The lish so fat with butter. He can go to mill mid a bag of grain and a boy on his pack. He drots and gaiters and valks and yen he valks his feet goes on von after the odder. Old Cholly has a long dail hanging down behint—but I cut it off to odder day so dat it it be not so long as to dail of mine uncle Hauness buck. Whoever will bring pack de teef or de hursh shall bay twenty five dollar reward on ax no questions. HAUN VAN BAUGEN."

Origin of the word 'Lady.'—Formerly when the affluent lived all the year round at their mansions in the country, the lady of the manor distributed to her poor neighbors, with her own hands, once a week, or oftener, a certain quantity of bread, and, she was called by them the loff-day, that is, in the Saxon, the bread giver. These words were, in time, corrupted and the meaning is now as little known as the practice which gave rise to it.

A brave Old Oak.—In a recent interview with Hon. John Q. Adams, he addressed his visitors in the following language; "I am a member, in full communion, of the Congregational church of Quincy. Henry Adams, my ancestor, emigrated from England in 1634, and was one of the founders of this church in 1639. His son Joseph was long a member of the same church, and died in 1694, aged 68. His son Joseph was also a member and died in 1759, aged 82. His son John my grandfather, was long a member and a deacon in this church, and died in 1760, aged 68 years. My father was long a member and died as you will remember, in 1826, at the age of 91. On my father's decease I joined the same church. I had not joined before, as I was most of the time absent from home; But God has long been my hope and now, as I am about to die, I have a calm and cheerful hope of joining my ancestors in a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—Quincy Patriot.

A Ploughing Match, Exhibition, and Sale of Cattle, will take place at Hoboken, opposite this city on Tuesday the 1st day of August next, under the patronage and direction of the American Institute. The object of the ploughing is to test the relative value of the various ploughs that may be brought forward for competition; the field being open to all, and a medal to be given to the owner of the plough which shall be adjudged the most perfect. A sale of choice cattle is expected to take place, and an exhibition of superior agricultural implements. All the arrangements are made to preclude expense to contributors; passage is provided for cattle and an auctioneer will be in attendance to sell them without charge.—New Yorker.

POETICAL.

From the N. Y. Evangelist.

BURIAL AT SEA.

"There is in the lone, lone sea,
A spot unmarked, but holy;
For there the gallant and the free
In his ocean-bed lies lowly.
He sleeps serene and safe
From tempest and from billow,
While storms that high above him chafe,
Scarce rock his peaceful pillow."

Morning rose calm o'er the Atlantic wastes,
On which a gallant ship sat motionless!
No sail unfurled its seowry form, to woo
The gentle breeze, nor stern commander's voice
Mingled its thundering bass with treble tones
Of the lithe sailor's song; all, all was hushed.
E'en Nature paused, as if in sympathy;—
While the still ocean's bosom, like a glass,
Waited to image some appalling scene!

When, on the clean swept deck, the hardy crew
Came gathering one by one, in neat attire;
But none with oath profane upon his lips,
So oft, alas! the ship-boy's dialect:
One took his post beside the muffled bell,
With action that was suited to obey
The ship-clock summons, sounded from below.
And now, the dreaded hour of ten had come!
The dismal knell sent forth a moaning voice,
And at its bidding, came procession slow
From out the cabin, while in front was borne
The lifeless relics of a fellow man.
No coffin rich, adorned with silver plate,
Enclosed the stranger's dust, or told his name;
Twas wrapt in humble canvass and unmarked,
Save with initials traced in lines of black:
The kindly bearers rested now their charge,
And stood beside, in waiting attitude.

A varied group, the aged and the young,
Seated themselves around with solemn mien;
All showed emotion! from the bright-eyed child,
Which sobbed alone at something, yet it knew
Not what, to the rough tar, who viewed the scene,
Brushing the big tear from his furrowed cheek!
All wept! but yet among them, not one to
Of nature had been severed by the blow:
Had then that smitten one no friend? ah yes!
A mother (and a widow, though unwarned,)
Clasped in her arms the babe who bore his smile,
And o'er it, whispered to the ear of Heaven—
"God bless the father of my boy!" (she said,
But tears subsided choked the accents soft;)
"Why do I weep? he'll sure return again."

There was a pause—and then the man of God
Lifted his voice aloud to Him who holds
The waters in the hollow of his hand!
And when he plead the promise of a God,
Who is the widow's Judge, and orphan's Sire!
A sob convulsive went from heart to heart,
And deeply was responded the "Amen!"

The prayer was finished. Yet again they raised
And bore that body to the vessel's side;
And while it hung suspended o'er the waves,
The holy man read with impressive voice—
"We do commit our brother to the deep,
There to corrupt—and look for that bright morn
Of resurrection, when the Archangel's trump
Will bid the sea give up her numerous dead,
And this vile body shall be changed, and made
Like to the glorious body of our Lord!"

'Twas done! the ocean op'd its yawning mouth,
And quick, in triumph, closed it o'er the gift.
Then was the canvass spread before the breeze!
The plaintive notes of sadness died away!
And mirthful tones and sunny smiles dispersed
That cloud of gloom.

On went the gallant ship!
Plowing the waters, with her prow bent towards
A spot in ocean's fair, bright isle!
Which only desired to see, that closed without
The sight. The stranger's name was soon forgot
By those who did embrace that island home.

But oh! one heart, one widowed heart yet bleeds!
And often the wild tear-drop gushes forth,
When the unconscious orphan, wond'ring asks—
Mother, dear mother! when will father come?"

The Rail-road Steamer.

BY JAMES JOHNSON, M. D.

(Concluded.)

To those who are curious, and not very timid, the open carriages are far preferable to the closed ones, especially in fine weather. In bad weather, or, and particularly at first, invalids may travel with more advantage under cover. I have no doubt, that to thousands and tens of thousands of valetudinarians in this overgrown Babylon, the run to Boxmoor, or tring and back, twice or thrice a week, will prove the means of preserving health and prolonging life, more powerful than all the drugs in Apothecaries Hall.

In fine a man may travel from the pole to the equator—

without seeing any thing half so astonishing as the wonders of the rail-road. The passing of the scenes, and the convulsions of the elements, excite feelings of horror and terror, without any thing of pride. The magic—the miracles of the rail-road, engender an exalting consciousness of superiority in the genius of man, more intense and conclusive than any effort of poet, painter, or philosopher.

The rail-road journey however, is not without its inconveniences, many of which may be prevented by a little ingenuity. The greatest is the discharge of cinders, some of them ignited, from the chimney. These are not only disagreeable, but occasionally dangerous to the eyes of those in the open carriages. This might be prevented by an arrangement, a protection which is adopted on some rail-roads, and one that must ultimately be adopted on all. It is a protection from the elements of fire and water, which every company is bound to afford to the passengers, and is attended with trifling expense. Till then glasses or a veil are necessary guards for the eyes!

The transits of the tunnels, in hot weather, causing a sudden vicissitude of temperature, to the extent of the thermometer, or thereabouts, require some precaution on the part of sensitive invalids. A shawl, or large handkerchief, thrown over the head, is a sufficient protection; and those who do not take this measure, should keep their eyes shut, during the passage, since sparks and cinders are, unavoidably thrown in closer showers over the passengers here than in the open space.

To speculate on the moral, physical, political and economical effects and consequences of rail-roads and steam navigation, when carried to their full extent, is beyond my province—perhaps beyond the bounds of human foresight. The semi civilized peasants of the remotest isle of the Hebrides, of Orkney, and of Shetland, will, even now, transmit, in a few hours, the produce of their huts, their mountains, their moors, and their farm-yards, to the markets of Glasgow and Edinburg, so as, in three or four days, to pay the annual rents of their tenements and wilderneeses, what may we not expect from the extension and perfection of this facility of intercommunication? In days of yore, the imponderable product of the intellect travelled as slowly as the material merchandise of mankind. They will now be diffused from the center to the periphery—from the remotest outlines to the feet of society, with a rapidity little less than that of thought itself! The ultimate consequences cannot be appreciated at present; but we may safely conclude, that the benevolent author of our existence did not endow the mind of man with such extraordinary powers of invention, without the design of final advantage to his physical wants, his social relations, and his spiritual nature.—Medico. Chirurgical Review.

A Rainbow at Midnight.—According to the Bridgeton Chronicle of Saturday, the thunder storm of Wednesday evening last presented some peculiar and sublime phenomena, in that vicinity. "The whole western horizon from south-west to north-east was begirt with cloud piled on cloud like Pelion upon Ossa, and the play of electricity from head to head was sublime in the extreme." It is added—

Three flashes followed each other in such rapid succession as scarcely to discover any interval. The cloud rose slowly—and we chose a favorable position, and gazed upon the grand and imposing spectacle with subdued reverence and delighted awe, until the eddying winds admonished us to seek shelter from the threatening tempest.

The cloud however soon passed by, and with but very little rain, although we are informed the rain fell in torrents nearly all around us. After the blast of wind was over, which was about 11 o'clock, we again sallied forth to gain the look upon the scene—and what was our delight and astonishment to behold suspended upon the black curtain of the west, a beautiful rainbow caused by the moon beams!—The arch was entire and bore a perfect resemblance of the bow of sunshine except in color—this being a glistering white! It was marked by a scientific gentleman present, that he had never witnessed the like before.

Strong facts in regard to Horse Racing.—A writer in the Louisville City Gazette, thus tersely presents this matter.

"Races, it is said, improve the breed of horses. And what if they did, if they degrade the breed of men. But I doubt the truth of this position. Some few startling or stubborn facts are on the other side. I never heard of races in Arabia, yet thebest horses and the best blood in the world are there. The great racing stock of England & America sprung from the blood of the Godolphin Arabian. There are no races in New England yet the New England horses are worth in this country from fifty to a hundred per cent more than southern horses. The horses for the plough, dray, saddle, stage coach or gig in New England would bring under the hammer, far higher prices in racing sections of the country, than their own horses. I was told in Virginia, by the stage drivers, that their best horses were brought from Vermont and New Hampshire, the Green Mountain horses are the best in the country for symmetry, strength, fleetness and endurance. Yet there is no racing in New England. Racing then is surely not essential to make good horses."

A novel mammoth bell, weighing 5000 lbs has been cast by Ames, at Springfield, Mass. for the New York City Hall. It is 2000 lbs larger than any cast in this country. It is to be rung by a crank, and the tongue instead of striking on two sides, passes entirely round the inner surface.

Choice Taste.—A flippant, starchy coquet to on a steamboat, was asked if she would be helped to a bit of the fowl. The young tart, wishing to be extremely polite and fantastical on the occasion, with much dignity of air replied, "Thank you prodigiously, sir; I'd purfur a nice little immoderate gob of those ramified baleby assengers.—Arkansas Spy.

A yankee pedlar, recommending a scythe he wished to sell, said that one of the same kind was so sharp, that they hung it on a tree in Kentucky and its shadow cut a man's leg off.

Great Destruction of Property.—Very heavy rains have fallen at Matanzas in some instances obliging the inhabitants to leave their residences for fear the buildings should tumble in upon them. Great loss would be experienced by the merchants in consequence of the wet getting into the Government Stores, and spoiling the sugar and molasses.

Gen. Hamilton, of S. C. has negotiated a loan for a million for the great railroad to be received from Europe in October, when the S. C. bank will resume. Georgia is negotiating for half a million Ohio $600,000.

According to an official census recently taken Wisconsin Territory including Iowa, since set off contains 41,000 inhabitants. The new territory of Iowa, west of the Mississippi contains rather the largest half of the people. As an evidence of the fertility of the soil, it is mentioned that a turnip was raised last year, which would more than fill a half a bushel.

Commendable.—The proprietors of the steamboat Beaver, which exploded lately, on the Allegheny river, have dismissed every officer employed on board, it being ascertained that the accident was caused by the negligence of the engineer, who at the time was intoxicated.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

"The principles of the Anti-Slavery society came from the bottomless pit." Justice to the speaker taxed with this declaration in the last number of the Union, demands an explanation; and especially so, as the editor has, "upon good authority," published it to his readers. The substance of his declaration was as follows: The abolishment of slavery was taken into consideration by benevolent men who sought to better the condition of the slaves. The devil believing it would be injurious to his cause and knowing it was a day of ultraism, urged them to amalgamate ultra principles with their former ones, which would militate against their object, the abolishment of slavery. To secure his object, and to counteract theirs, by the rapid spread of his ultra principles, he himself had turned charioteer; and also that the principles of modern abolitionism were from the bottomless pit.

He is ready to acknowledge that the above assertion is a little unqualified, yet he thought at the time, and he still thinks, that his hearers understood him to mean ultra principles, which he called modern abolitionism, and not the principles of the Anti-slavery society with which you have liberally taxed him. However, as your liberality is based upon "good authority, I am not disposed to impugn your benevolent motives in giving it publicity, yet I think we would do well to be more cautious in circulating second-handed declarations, especially by the press, inasmuch as they are somewhat like serpentine and sluggish streams, the more remote they get from the fountain the muddier and more offensive they become. By ultra principles he intended those which were followed by alarming excitements, which if he thought necessary he could easily name; but they are well known to the community. The speaker brought in question, as yet sees no reason why he should call back a single sentiment advanced by him on the 4th. Whether the ground is tenable or not, will be determined at some future period,—at that time when the judgment fires of the other world will throw their brilliant rays around the originating and existing causes of those unhallowed collisions that are witnessed in our beloved country upon the subject of slavery. He believes the abolishment of slavery ought so to be taken into consideration. And when wiser headsand good hearts shall have fixed upon measures that are safe, sure, and expeditiory to effect such an object he is ready to go with them. Until then he begs the privilege of supporting the principles advanced by him on the 4th inst. and also to stand aloof entirely from the existing crusade which is carried on by southern abolitionists. THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, July 24, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

☞ A very lamentable accident occurred not far from this place on Thursday afternoon last, by which a worthy family of this village is thrown into much affliction. Mr. Daniel Lyons, an estimable young man of Plainfield, was engaged with several others in excavating a high hill between Scotch Plains and Westfield, on the line of the Somerville and Elizabethtown Rail Road, when the bank caved in and instantaneously killed him, while his companions but just escaped. The cause of his being the only death was, that being a very industrious and active man, he had advanced a yard or two further under the bank, than the others, and, in consequence, was overwhelmed by a large mass of earth before he could effect his escape. Not having been able to obtain employment at his trade, carriage making, he was induced to work upon the rail-road, where he thus met with an untimely grave. He was between 21 and 22 years of age.

Another.—Mr. John Giles, coach smith, of New Market, was riding down a steep hill on the top of a load of hay, near his dwelling house on on Wednesday last, when the load was turned over, and Mr. Giles was shockingly mangled.—The hip was either dislocated or broken, and the thigh bone driven into his body. He was still living at the last accounts, but was not expected to recover.

The inhabitants of Plainfield and vicinity have had a rare and rich treat during the past week, in listening to two temperance lectures from Mr. Aiken, agent of the State Total Abstinence Society. Large and delighted audiences listened to both, with interest, pleasure and profit, to the close, though of considerable length. Mr. Aiken's manner is quite peculiar, but effectual and extremely amusing, and from the many whom we have heard speak of them we have heard but one voice, the voice of praise. We know not when we have been more amused and interested than on Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, in the Baptist church of Plainfield.

On the 10th inst. the State Gazette says, the thermometer in the hall of the New Jersey prison 20 or 30 feet from any sunshine, surrounded by thick stone walls and fanned by a constant breeze rose to 95!

But Wednesday, the 11th inst. from the accounts received from all parts appears to have been the hottest day of this extra hot season.—In many places in the northern states, the thermometer rose to 100.

"Lycee" will be published next week—it came too late for this.

Later from Europe.—The packet Siddons, from Liverpool, arrived at New York on Thursday, bringing papers to the 15th of June. No political news of importance. Money plenty,—business good, and cotton still depressed. The coronation and steam ships are the principal topics of interest. There are now four companies formed in England for the purpose of establishing lines of steamers to New York. Besides lines to the West Indies and between London and Brazil are also being established.

A new steamer called the Tiger, with 300 horse power engines, very large and the fastest boat afloat was preparing to leave Liverpool on the 4th of July. She is soon expected in N. Y.

The Royal William, which is daily expected in New York, runs 15 miles an hour.

A steamboat explosion occurred on the Thames June 14th. Five were killed and five or six so badly wounded that they were not expected to recover.

The condition of Ireland is represented as being much disturbed.

The Royal Society has appointed a committee to investigate the subject of Animal Magnetism.

A steam organ has been invented at Tyne. It makes very good music, and goes by steam.

The Queen we are happy to see has become the patroness of the London Temperance Society.

Almost complete returns are received from the Louisiana state election, which has been looked forward to with much anxiety by both parties for some time past. The Whigs have elected their candidate for governor, (Roman,) by about 600 majority, somewhat less than their majority at the last election—they have also elected all three Congressmen, and a majority in the state legislature. This being the first election for the next Congress, it was looked upon as of considerable importance. The whigs have gained one representative in Congress, in the place of Gen. Ripley, who was unable to attend during the whole of the last session, on account of sickness; otherwise the offices remain in the hands of the same party as before.

A writer in the Newark Daily, of Friday last, thinks it wrong to ascribe the death of so many individuals to drinking cold water in these hot time. He thinks, and brings forward many proofs, that water alone hardly ever kills any body, and that only those are effected who drink intoxicating liquors before-hand. He is probably correct. Their death then should more properly be ascribed to intemperate habits, rather than to water drinking.

The following capital toast, by the Hon. S. A. Elliott, was drank on the Fourth, at Boston,—The Ladies—Anti-republican in some of their notions—some of them believe that "all men are equal"—few of them are willing that any man should be free.

A new smelting process has been invented for the extraction of gold, at one of the southern mines, which promises to be of much importance to the mining operations.

At the Charlotte mine in North Carolina by this new process they obtained from 124 bushels of ore:

600 dwts of gold, at 90 cents,	$540
44 ounces of silver at 91,	44
1 ton of lead,	120

This mine yielded by the washing process, only 30 to 40 cents a bushel, and had been abandoned.

Despatch.—Mr. George W. Smith, of Blockley township, Philadelphia county, had his harvest cut the wheat standing in the field in the morning, hauled it in, threshed and cleansed it took it to the mill, had it ground and brought home, had the flour made into bread, and eat part of it before night of the same day.

The Election—Duels.—Extract of a letter dated N. Orleans, July 4, 1838.

Our city is all commotion in consequence of the election. Never before was there so much excitement. Almost every man goes to the polls armed, and already there are 15 or 20 duels on the tapis, to come off immediately after the election. Last week we had one between two Philadelphians, Barclay and McLaughlin—the latter was shot through the heart the 3d fire. There has been 8 fought within the last two days.

Fire!—About 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning, the 11th inst., a cotton Factory of Mr. N. P. Thomas, of Whippany, (the one known as the "old mill,") was discovered on fire, and totally consumed, with its contents—loss $5,000, and no insurance. There had been no fire in the mill for several weeks, and as none of the machinery had been in operation for eight hours to cause fire by friction, it is believed to be the work of an incendiary.—Jerseyman.

☞ The present hot weather is driving many of the inhabitants of the city into the country, and we are pleased to perceive that by the facilities afforded by the Camden and Woodbury Railroad a considerable number find their way here. On the 4th inst. more than one thousand passengers were carried over that road. This speaks well for the interest of the Company. The increased amount of business done on the road is fully justified by its excellence, and by the care and attention of the officers who have the trains in charge. —Woodbury Constitution.

Brookville—Moving of.—We have had occasion frequently to allude to the constant emigration to which is taking place from this District to the Far West; it seems, however, that the moving spirit, which has taken possession of so many of our inhabitants, is no longer to be confined to individual or isolated cases, but has seized themes masse.

A public meeting has been held, within the last few days, at Portland, in the township of Bastard at which, we have been informed, not less than the heads of sixty families subscribed their names as intended emigrants. The sum of 400 dollars was subscribed to defray the expense of sending two agents to the "land of promise," in order to lay out the site for the intended location of the emigrants. Messrs. Peter Brasse and Duncan Campbell were we understand, chosen agents, and have already set out on their mission.

[Brookville (U. C.) Chronicle.

An idle boy kindled a fire with his segar, in Tenth st. Philadelphia, on Monday, which destroyed two Carpenter's shops, and two three story dwellings, and a large feed store. The facts are thus stated—

A lad had a segar in his hand, with which he was attempting to light some shavings by swinging them around. They took fire, and burning his hand, he threw them down, unfortunately, among a large quantity of shavings, which immediately took up, and led to a conflagration such as does not often occur in Philadelphia, occasioning much inconvenience to many, and perhaps suffering to some.

British Feasting.—The corporation of St. Ishad, N. B. roasted three oxen in the street on the day of the Queens coronation, June 28.

Upwards of 1700 passengers passed over the Rail road between Baltimore and Philadelphia on the 4th inst.

New wheat is selling in Baltimore for one dollar and a half a bushel. The crop is very abundant, the quality of the best.

The Indian chief Aligator, and a part of his tribe, 32 in number, arrived at New Orleans on the 6th inst. from Tampa bay.

King Philip, another chief, died on board the steamboat on his way to Arkansas. He was buried forty miles below Fort Gibson: 100 guns were fired over his grave.

Why is a newspaper like a tooth brush? D'ye give it up? Because every man should have one of his own, and not borrow his neighbor's.

The Girard College in Philadelphia will soon be completed; the marble work of the centre main buildings being raised to the height of the third story floor. When completed this will be the most classical and beautiful edifice in the U. States.

A Windfall for twelve Fishermen.—It appears that the ship N. Hooper, whose wreck, as was supposed, on Nantucket shoal, caused the captain and crew to abandon her, floated off, and was picked up next day some 40 miles distant by the fishing schr. Climax, having about 6 feet water in her hold. The salvage will amount to some thing for the lucky fellows who towed her to Boston, as she was insured for upwards of $100,000.

An editor in the Far West has bought a race-horse, for which he paid $2000. On being asked, what an editor had to do with a race-horse, he replied, that he was to be used in "catching runaway subscribers."

The Indian Chief Alligator, and a part of his tribe, 32 in number, arrived at New Orleans on the 5th inst. from Tampa Bay.

Preservation of Foliage.—The N. Y. Evening Post says:

Those who care to preserve the shade of the trees and shrubs, should be told that sal ammoniab, which may be had at any druggist's shop, dissolved in common water, and thrown with a syringe on the trees, will destroy the insects entirely.

The Giraffies, recently brought to N. Y. from South Africa, and now to be seen in Broadway near Spring st. are the first ever brought to this country. They cost the prohrietors, Yankees of course $30,000.

Tall Rye.—We have received of Mr. Wm. Baker, of Salem, a bunch of spears of rye, which measures seven feet and eight inches. The newspapers talk about Kentucky giants and mammoth animals, but certainly our industrious farmer, from the pinnacle of his spears of Rye, can look down upon the rest of the world.—N. J. Jour.

A swarm of Bees have taken up their quarters in the steeple of Christ Church, Baltimore, and have already done a good business in their line, having accumulated a good quantity of honey.

The Railroad from Boston to Salem will be traversed in 30 minutes, and from Boston to Linn in 15!

Detroit with a population of nearly ten thousand had but a single death during the week ending on the 7th inst.

The Hudson Republican states that a new bank will go into operation in that city, probably before the close of the year, under the bank law of the last session of the N. Y. Legislature. The capital is to be $200,000.

It is stated in the Lexington Ky. Intelligencer that on the 8th inst the stage coaches of the two lines running between Louisville and Lexington, were both upset, in consequence of racing between the drivers!

The New Orleans Picayune of the 10th inst. says, by the barque Robt. Watt, Capt. Dellimore arrived yesterday from Barbadoes, we learn that all the slaves on that island have been liberated by an order from the British Government.

A severe drought prevails over Long Island, and the farmers begin to despair of their potatoe crops.

☞ A party at Belleville, consisting of Messrs. Pomeroy, Joralemon, ann two others caught nine large shad in the Passaic, at that place, on the 20th. An unprecedented occurrence at this season.

The American Life and Trust Co. is about to commence a 5 million Bank in New-York, for the purpose of Inland Exchange.

The citizen's of Savannah observed Thursday the 12th inst, as a day of public mourning, on account of the late disaster to the Pulaski. All business was suspended, and an appropriate discourse was delivered to the city, by Rev. Mr. Preston.

The farmers of U. Canada are constantly emigrating to our western States. Upwards of 150 with 42 horses, and 21 wagons, left Colburgh on Sunday last for the U. S.

At the sale of Blooded Cattle, at Bloomfield, New York, in the latter part of May, three cows, and the stock that has been raised from them in three years, was sold for four thousand nine hundred and sixty dollars!

Etiquette.—A fatal duel some short time since occurred west between two Irish gentlemen, who disputed at table whether it was more genteel to serve up new potatoes pealed or with the skins on.

☞ Brown a drunkard of Ark. recently murdered his wife, by shooting her with a rifle, as she was sitting in the midst of her children, in the shade of a tree, sewing. Seeing the rifle she rose and received the ball between her breasts! The children fled to the nearest neighbors, three miles, and the brute was found stupidly drunk by the bed on which he laid his victim. The crime is greatly aggravated by the delicate condition of his wife.

The Alton murderers are fast reaping the reward of their guilt. Sawyer, one of their counsel, it is well known, is in the Illinois penitentiary for stealing the public money. James M. Rock is in the Ohio Penitentiary, for highway robbery. He knocked down a man in Cincinnati, and robbed him of his money and watch, and is sentenced to seven years' military confinement. Wm. Carr, who was appointed Secretary of the State convention by the interlopers, is also in jail in Cincinnati.

Politics and Colonization.—On Monday last, the Rev. Dr. Proudfit, the Secretary and General Agent of the New York Colonization Society was returning towardsthis city in the stage. In conversation with some abolitionists on board, he mentioned several things which he regarded as imparting a peculiar brightness to the prospects of the colonization cause at the present time. One was that he had learned at Washington city, by repeated conversation with the great men of the nation, among whom he named Mr. Clay, Mr. Whittlesey of Ohio, and others. The Doctor said in substance, "in about two years, we shall have Mr. Clay chosen President of the United States and he will then employ the resources of the nation in the removal of the blacks, just as they have been employed in the removal of the Indians."

We have thought it our duty to make this information public. No one who knows Dr. Proudfit, will question his veracity in this matter. He was told this story at Washington by the men whom he named. Whether the story itself is true or false, let those answer who know. But we call the attention of all sects and parties to the matter.—Emancipator.

Indians—one of the youngest of our States—is now making a canal 440 miles long. This great work, the Wabash Canal is to reach from Manhattan, at the mouth of Maumee river, to Terre Haute, on the Wabash, 310 miles; thence by a cross cut, 24 miles to central Canal and down the southern section of that 110 miles to Evansville on the Ohio river, in the south-western part of Indiana, making a total distance of 444 miles. The summit level, about two hundred feet above Lake Erie, isat Fort Wayne. Upwards of 100 miles, of Wayne, is now ready for navigation, and the whole will be completed by October, 1839.

Some of the enterprising citizens of Rochester, have formed an association under the General Banking law and about to commence business with a capital of $180,000, to be increased hereafter to 1,000,000.—The association has already deposited with the Comptroller the amount of State Stock required by the law as security to bill holders.

An attempt was made to burn the city of Vicksburg on the night of the 22d ult. Two suspected persons were arrested, one of whom confessed that he had been instigated to the crime by a bribe of fifty dollars.

A Queer Situation.—We perceive by the Star that last week while a large party of ladies were cooling themselves in "the briny wave," on Rockaway beach, the horses attached to the bathing machine, which contained their dresses, started off at full speed, leaving the poor creatures in a position, that, as the novel writers say, can be better imagined than described. Fortunately no person was in the carriage, which was entirely destroyed before the horses could be extricated.—New Era.

Fifty years ago, there were but sixty-four white inhabitants in the state of Ohio; now there are more than a million.

Eclipse of the Sun.—There will be almost a total eclipse of the Sun on the 18th of September next, in the United States,. It will be the last central eclipse of the Sun, visible in the U. States until that of May 26th, 1954—which will be also annular. The next total eclipse of the Sun will be August 7th 1864.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—"three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, a super royal octave.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"We refer to have my choice of this work on one hand, a set of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly prefer Jenks's." By Dr. Jenks. The genuine and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families. In short, every thing nearly arranged for family reading as well as private seeing, and in parties early applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture in manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a goodly pearl, which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—"Its well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Almost complete returns are received from the Louisiana state election, which has been looked forward to with much anxiety by both parties for some time past. The Whigs have elected their candidate for governor, (Roman,) by about 800 majority, some what less than their majority at the last election—they have also elected all three Congressmen, and a majority in the state legislature. This being the first election for the next Congress, it was looked upon as of considerable importance. The whigs have gained one representative in Congress, in the place of Gen. Ripley, who was unable to attend during the whole of the last session, on account of sickness; otherwise the offices remain in the hands of the same party as before.

A writer in the Newark Daily, of Friday last, thinks it wrong to ascribe the death of so many individuals to drinking cold water in these hot times. He thinks, and brings forward many proofs, that water alone hardly ever kills any body, and that only those are effected who drink intoxicating liquors before-hand. He is probably correct. Their death then should more properly be ascribed to intemperate habits, rather than to water drinking.

The Election—Duels.—Extract of a letter dated N. ORLEANS, July 4, 1838.

Our city is all commotion in consequence of the election. Never before was there so much excitement. Almost every man goes to the polls armed, and already there are 15 or 20 duels on the tapis, to come off immediately after the election. Last week we had one between two Philadelphians, Barclay and McLaughlin—the latter was shot through the heart the 3d fire. There has been 6 fought within the last two days.

FIRE!—About 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning, the 11th inst., a cotton Factory of Mr. N. P. Thomas, of Whippany, (the one known as the "old mill,") was discovered on fire, and totally consumed—loss $5,000, and no insurance. There had been no fire in the mill for several weeks, and as none of the machinery had been in operation for eight hours to cause fire by friction; it is believed to be the work of an incendiary.—Jerseyman.

☞ The present hot weather is driving many of the inhabitants of the city into the country, and we are pleased to perceive that by the facilities afforded by the Camden and Woodbury Railroad a considerable number find their way there. On the 4th inst. more than one thousand passengers were carried over the road. This speaks well for the interest of the Company. The increased amount of business done on the road is fully justified by its excellence, and by the care and attention of the officers who have the trains in charge. —Woodbury Constitution.

Brookville—Moving of.—We have had occasion frequently to allude to the constant emigration which is taking place from this District to the Far West. It seems, however, that the moving spirit, which has taken possession of so many of our inhabitants, is no longer to be confined to individual or isolated cases, but has seized themes masse.

A public meeting has been held, within the last few days, at Peotland, in the township of Bastard as which, we have been informed, not less than the heads of sixty families subscribed their names as intended emigrants. The sum of 400 dollars was subscribed to defray the expense of sending two agents to the "land of promise," in order to lay out the site for the intended location of the emigrants. Messrs. Peter Brasse and Duncan Campbell were we understand, chosen agents, and have already set out on their mission.

[Brockville (U. C.) Chronicle.

An idle boy kindled a fire with his segar, in Tenth st. Philadelphia, on Monday, which destroyed two Carpenter's shops, and two three story dwellings, and a large feed store. The facts are thus stated—

A lad had a segar in his hand, with which he was attempting to light some shavings by swinging them around. They took fire, and burning his hand, he threw them down, unfortunately, a money a large quantity of shavings, which immediately blazed up, and led to a conflagration such as does not often occur in Philadelphia, occasioning much inconvenience to many, and perhaps suffering to some.

British Feasting.—The corporation of St. Johns, N. B. roasted three oxen in the street on the day of the Queens coronation, June 28.

Upwards of 1700 passengers passed over the Rail road between Baltimore and Philadelphia on the 4th inst.

New wheat is selling in Baltimore for one dollar and a half a bushel. The crop is very abundant, the quality of the best.

The Indian chief Alligator, and a part of his tribe, 32 in number, arrived at New Orleans on the 8th inst. from Tampa bay.

King Philip, another chief, died on board the steamboat on his way to Arkansas. He was buried forty miles below Fort Gibson: 100 guns were fired over his grave.

Why is a newspaper like a tooth brush? D'ye give it up? Because every man should have one of his own, and not borrow his neighbor's.

The Girard College in Philadelphia will soon be completed: the marble work of the centre main buildings being raised to the height of the third story floor. When completed this will be the most classical and beautiful edifice in the U. States.

A Windfall for twelve Fishermen.—It appears that the ship N. Hooper, whose wreck, as was supposed, on Nantucket shoal, caused the captain and crew to abandon her, floated off, and was picked up next day some 40 miles distant by the fishing schr. Climax, having about 6 feet water in her hold. The salvage will amount to some thing for the lucky fellows who towed her to Boston, as she was insured for upwards of $100,000.

An editor in the Far West has bought a race-horse, for which he paid $2000. On being asked, what an editor had to do with a race-horse, he replied, that he was to be used in "catching runaway subscribers."

The Indian Chief Alligator, and a part of his tribe, 32 in number, arrived at New Orleans on the 8th inst. from Tampa Bay.

Preservation of Foliage.—The N. Y. Evening Post says:

Those who care to preserve the shade of the trees and shrubs, should be told that sal ammoniab, which may be had at any druggist's shop, dissolved in common water, and thrown with a syringe on the trees, will destroy the insects entirely.

The Giraffies, recently brought to N. Y. from South Africa, and now to be seen in Broadway near Spring st. are the first ever brought to this country. They cost the proprietors, Yankees of course $30,000.

Tall Rye.—We have received of Mr. Wm. Baker, of Salem, a bunch of spears of rye, which measures seven feet and eight inches. The newspapers talk about Kentucky giants and mammoth animals, but certainly our industrious farmer, from the pinnacle of his spears of Rye, can look down upon the rest of the world.—N. J. Jour.

A swarm of Bees have taken up their quarters in the steeple of Christ Church, Baltimore, and have already done a good business in their line, having accumulated a good quantity of honey.

The Railroad from Boston to Salem will be traversed in 30 minutes, and from Boston to Linn in 15!

Detroit with a population of nearly ten thousand had but a single death during the week ending on the 7th inst.

The Hudson Republican states that a new bank will go into operation in that city, probably before the close of the year, under the bank law of the last session of the N. Y. Legislature. The capital is to be $200,000.

It is stated in the Lexington Ky. Intelligencer that on the 8th inst the stage coaches of the two lines running between Louisville and Lexington, were both upset, in consequence of racing between the drivers!

The New Orleans Picayune of the 10th inst. says, by the barque Robt. Watt, Capt. Dellimore arrived yesterday from Barbadoes, we learn that all the slaves on that island have been liberated by an order from the British Government.

A severe drought prevails over Long Island, and the farmers begin to despair of their potatoe crops.

☞ A party at Belleville, consisting of Messrs. Pomeroy, Joralemon, ans two others caught nine large shad in the Passaic, at that place, on the 20th. An unprecedented occurrence at this season.

The American Life and Trust Co. is about to commence a 5 million Bank in New-York, for the purpose of Inland Exchange.

The citizen's of Savannah observed Thursday the 12th inst, as a day of public mourning, on account of the late dis ster to the Pulaski. All business was suspended, and an appropriate discourse was delivered to the city, by Rev. Mr. Preston.

The farmers of U. Canada are constantly emigrating to our western States. Upwards of 150 with 42 horses, and 21 wagons, left Colbugh on Sunday last for the U. S.

At the sale of Blooded Cattle, at Bloomfield, New York, in the latter part of May, three cows, and the stock that has been raised from them in three years, was sold for four thousand nine hundred and sixty dollars!

Etiquette.—A fatal duel some short time since occurred west between two Irish gentlemen, who disputed at table whether it was more genteel to serve up new potatoes pealed or with the skins on.

☞ Brown a drunkard of Ark. recently murdered his wife, by shooting her with a rifle, as she was sitting in the midst of her children, in the shade of a tree, sewing. Seeing the rifle she rose and received the ball between her breasts! The children fled to the nearest neighbors, three miles, and the brute was found stupidly drunk by the bed on which he laid his victim. The crime is greatly aggravated by the delicate condition of the wife.

The Alton murderers are fast reaping the reward of their guilt. Sawyer, one of their counsel, it is well known, is in the Illinois penitentiary for stealing the public money. James M. Rock, is in the Ohio Penitentiary, for highway robbery. He knocked down a man in Cincinnati, and robbed him of his money and watch, and is sentenced to seven years' solitary confinement. Wm. Carr, who was appointed Secretary of the State convention by the interlopers, is also in jail in Cincinnati.

Politics and Colonization.—On Monday last, the Rev. Dr. Proudfit, the Secretary and General Agent of the New York Colonization Society was returning towardsthis city in the stage. In conversation with some abolitionists on board, he mentioned several things which he regarded as impairing a peculiar brightness to the prospects of the colonization cause at the present time. One was what he had learned at Washington city, by repeated conversation with the prominent men of the nation, among whom he named Mr. Clay, Mr. Whittlesey of Ohio, and others. The Doctor said in substance, "in about two years, we shall have Mr. Clay chosen President of the United States and he will then employ the resources of the nation in the removal of the blacks, just as they have been employed in the removal of the Indians."

We have thought it our duty to make this information public. No one who knows Dr. Proudfit, will question his veracity in this matter. He was told this story at Washington by the men whom he named. Whether the story itself is true or false, let those answer who know. But we call the attention of all sects and parties to the matter.—Emancipator.

Indiana—one of the youngest of our States—is now making a canal 450 miles long. This great work, the Wabash Canal is to reach from Manhattan, at the mouth of Maumee river, to Terre Haute, on the Wabash, 310 miles; thence by a cross cut, 24 miles to central Canal and down the southern section of that 110 miles to Evansville on the Ohio river, in the south-western part of Indiana, making a total distance of 444 miles. The summit level, about two hundred feet above Lake Erie, isat Fort Wayne. Upwards of 100 miles, of Wayne, is now ready for navigation, and the whole will be completed by October, 1839.

Some of the enterprising citizens of Rochester have formed an association under the General Banking law and about to commence business with a capital of $180,000, to be increased hereafter to 1,000,000.—The association has already deposited with the Comptroller the amount of State Stock required by the law as security to bill holders.

An attempt was made to burn the city of Vicksburg on the night of the 22d ult. Two suspected persons were arrested, one of whom confessed that he had been instigated to the crime by a bribe of fifty dollars.

A Queer Situation.—We perceive by the Star that last week while a large party of ladies were cooling themselves in "the briny wave," on Rockaway beach, the horses attached to the bathing machine, which contained their dresses, started off at full speed, leaving the poor creatures in a position, that, as the novel writers say, can be better imagined than described. Fortunately no person was in the carriage, which was entirely destroyed before the horses could be extricated.—New Era.

Fifty years ago, there were but sixty-four white inhaditants in the state of Ohio; now there are more than a million.

Eclipse of the Sun.—There will be almost a total eclipse of the Sun on the 18th of September next, in the United States. It will be the last central eclipse of the Sun, visible in the U. States until that of May 26th, 1954—which will be also annular. The next total eclipse of the Sun will be August 7th 1864.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of research, and will answer the purpose of clergyman and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private use ding.—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities. We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a "goodly pearl," which every servant man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—this well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

J. HAWLEY'S
VEGETABLE ANTI-BILLIOUS
PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain-seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach; Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Worms in Children, Fits, &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but secure.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. Their great value to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased with having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and perfectly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended- especially for sacarides worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one can help but like them after they make use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dis-pepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in as country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in Maymats, under their assiduous attention.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of *Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an In*stitution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad or stage.

SEAR'S AMERICAN VEGETABLE

Renovating Pills.

DR. SEARS would most respectfully announce to the citizens of Plainfield and its vicinity, that his Vegetable Renovating Pills have for more than two years past been extensively used throughout the country, and in no instance has occurred to his knowledge in which they have not had a salutary effect, and, in many cases cases, they have proved very efficacious.

Although they are not offered as an infallible cure for all diseases, yet there are few cases (if any) to be found in which they will not have a salutary effect. Their great excellency is in Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Bilious affections, and diseases occasioned by a disordered state of the stomach and bowels, impurities of the blood, or obstructions in any of the natural secretions, and especially those peculiar to females, and habitual costiveness.

They are entirely vegetable, and have been the result of his own researches, occasioned by unusual sufferings from Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint for more than 30 years. They may with perfect safety be taken by infants, of all ages, in all cases of indisposition, and cannot produce any other than a salutary effect in any.—Their effects when taken according to the direction, will be to excite and maintain a natural peristaltic action in the stomach and bowels, and promote a discharge from them of whatever morbid or bilious matte they may contain—to excite action in the liver and promote its secretions—to purify the blood—to equalise a natural action—and to aid all the different organs of secretion and excretion in the performance of their various functions. And in producing all these salutary effects they will not debilitate, but strengthen and invigorate the whole system.

☞ Circulars giving a more general description of their properties, and containing numerous certificates of their good effects, may be gratuitously obtained at this Office where the Pills are for sale. 1 tf

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Embracs on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and European—Scientific and Literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the drama, and upon the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the actual demand and other announcements from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

Not more than a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the publishers, stating their selection price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the direction of the present editor, who will contribute, heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community, in the variety, the entertainment and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mutter, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors: and it is universally admitted that no work extant furnishes such valuable equivalent for the trifling amount at which it is offered per annum, as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither labour, time, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegantliterature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste and refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vitiate the purity upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra supervoyal quarto form, with revise, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music, arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, &c. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription will be taken for a less period than one year. All subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Cabinet Making.

THE Subscriber respectfully informs his friends and the public that he continues the above business at his old stand, and is prepared to execute orders in his line at short notice and on reasonable terms.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. As the present crisis, in the nation's history, is one of unusual excitement, and when public attention is more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservators of our free institutions. Patriotism as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise on a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorised agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

MIRON G. OLMSTED.

Plainfield, April 13, 1837. 12

Speech of Mr. Duncan, of Ohio,

In Reply to the Speech of Mr. Bond.—In the House, July 7, 1838.

Mr. Chairman: I am happy to have this opportunity to make some remarks in relation to the financial policy adopted, and so far pursued, by this and the late Administration. The bill now under consideration has been amended in the Senate, by striking out the appropriation of twenty thousand dollars for the improvement of the Cumberland river within the limits of Kentucky and Tennessee.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. Williams) says that this amendment was made in a certain quarter (meaning the Senate) for a certain purpose, (I suppose to punish the people of Kentucky for not being more Democratic,) and to affect a certain individual, (Mr. Clay.) This may all be if we are prepared to suppose that grave Senators could so far forget their high stations as to make such paltry considerations an object of action in the discharge of their high functions and sacred duties. But I think we may find another reason for this judicious and laudable amendment—a reason that has its foundation in patriotism and economy. The howl of extravagant profligacy and bankruptcy has never been out of our ears since the commencement of the session until this time, and it will continue with the cession. Yes, sir, that howl has cost the people more money than would redeem the Treasury notes now in circulation, which constitutes our present national debt. I say it was a regard for economy, and a desire to confine the appropriations within the probable estimates for the year, that induced the Senate to make the amendment in question.

Sir, what base and sickening inconsistency do we witness here every day; a charge constantly kept up that the Government is bankrupt, and the best prospects of the country ruined, by a profligate Administration; when it is a well known fact, and the journals show it, that every measure of extravagance and profligacy is brought forward sustained, and carried through to a law, by those who are opposed to the Administration, and who are constantly denouncing it for its profligacy.

It seems, from the profligate and reckless course of the Opposition in worthless and extravagant expenditures, that bankruptcy of the Government is one of the means by which this Administration is to be brought into disrepute with the people, and finally overthrown. Whenever there is an attempt made at reform, it is denounced as demagogueical; whenever there is an attempt made at economy and prudence in public expenditures, the whole pack of Opposition men who may have the most remote local interest, raise the howl that this attempt at economy is made for party purposes—to affect a certain State—to affect certain individuals—and to affect certain purposes. Yes, sir, although economy dwells on the lips of a certain party, extravagance has its home in their hearts. For the truth of this assertion, I refer you to the examination of the journals of the last five or eight years; where on all appropriations made that are of extravagance, there will be found a large majority of the members of the Opposed to this and the last administration, in favor of such measures—and the names of a large majority of the members friendly to those administrations will be found to be recorded against them.

Sir, I hold up the journals which contain the evidence of what I say. I only ask investigation. Among the vast number of unwarrantable appropriations, which I have not time to notice specially, I call your attention to one, only distinguished from the rest by the size of the sum. It is the appropriation made in the session of 1835 and 1836, for liquidating the debt due from the District of Columbia to Holland, and for carrying out certain improvements for which that loan was made. This entire appropriation amounted, I think, to one and a half millions. But let us inquire for what purposes this money was applied. It was applied first to the construction of a canal through the suburbs of your city (Washington,) which needs a canal about as much as a cart wants a third wheel. The south side of the south wing of this capitol faces the whole line of that canal. It is in view of every one who looks out of one of the south windows. I have been looking out for seven months, and I have yet to see the first boat disturb the stillness of its water. One is at a loss to know which to be most astonished at, the wickedness that conceived such unjustifiable folly, or the stupidity of the soil through which the canal is excavated, or the poverty and sterility of the country for whose benefit it was made. This canal is of Whig origin. The next extravagant and worthless appropriation of this money is for the construction of a turnpike road, made on the bank of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal. This road was made at great expense, and runs the extent of the District. The next is the turnpike road running parallel with the former. I am unable to draw the distinction between the folly involved in the construction of each of these roads. The existence of the one completely supersedes the necessity of the other, and both of but little use. The hill road seems to have been made to display the power of the Federal Government to prostrate hills and fill up hollows. I occasionally ride out in the evening for exercise My rides have, some six or seven times, been on these roads. I generally go out the bottom road and return the hill road. I have once seen a shackling waggon, drawn by two mules and a jack (Demerara team) so poor that one might hang his hat on their hip bones. This establishment was driven by a negro half naked, lame in one leg and blind of one eye. This, sir, is a specimen of the use made of what is called the bottom turnpike road; but I have never seen the first living creature on the hill road except the horse I rode. So much for the roads—useless roads—I mean those that have been made under my observation, which have been made by the people's money; and I undertake to say, in gross violation of their rights, if not in violation of the Constitution.

But, sir, the most profligate and extravagant appropriation for the Georgetown and Alexandria Canal and Aqueduct. This canal is now under way. Is located on the bank of the Potomac—a canal, deep still, and wide, (being tide water.) Why, sir, what will your people say when they learn that half a million of their money has been appropriated for the construction of a canal on the bank of the Potomac—a canal constructed by the Almighty, as far superior to your artificial effort as the majestic steamboat that rides upon its bosom is superior to the contemptible packet that floats upon your canal? But, sir, for whose benefit has this vast appropriation been made? For the benefit of the city of Alexandria. It is almost incredible with those who have seen Alexandria within the last three or four years, that such an appropriation should be made for her—a city that seems to have the finger of God and the hand of ruin upon it—now in a direct decline itself, and without the most remote prospect of ever surviving. The almost total abstraction of the trade from her port, the barrenness and poverty of the soil that surrounds her, must ever prevent her from being revived. Nothing can save her from final prostration and ruin. In half a century from this time, there will hardly be a standing monument of art for the tooth of time to operate upon; and yet it was for the benefit of these tottering remains of a city that this vast and expensive work has been undertaken, and to finish it must take much of the sacred proceeds of toil and sweat of those who will never see or witness the practical result of such consummate folly and wicked extravagance. Sir, you may draw upon the industry of the people for, and recover, a sufficient amount to complete this work; but there never will be a commercial motion enough on it to prevent the stagnation of its water. The noble canal which the Almighty has made, (the Potomac) and of which yours is but a contemptible imitation, will forever bear the produce destined for other places, (no toll being to be paid on it, but, like other Divine gifts, free.) Your canal will be the generator and birth-place of reptiles, and the abode of frogs. It will be a putrid, green pool of pestilence: and its exhalations will spread disease and death over your country. These, sir, are specimens of the appropriations that have emptied your Treasury, and been part of the means that have made it necessary for you to issue your credit in the form of Treasury notes, to keep the wheels of Government in motion; and I repeat it, that these profligate appropriations are made at the instance, and carried into ruinous practice by the votes of the very party who are constantly denouncing this and the late Administration for their extravagance and profligacy.

Sir, my object in discussing this question is not only for the purpose of sustaining the amendment in question, and to sustain the principles and policy that induced it, but also to answer and refute for ay of the propositions and assertions contained in a small pamphlet, which I hold in my hand, purporting to be a speech delivered by my colleague (Mr. Bond, from Ohio,) on a resolution offered some time since by a gentleman from Virginia, on the subject of the public printing.

In order to give the remarks upon that resolution some force with the Democratic party, my colleague says that the gentleman who offered it acts generally with the Administration party. I deny that the gentleman from Virginia, (Colonel Hopkins,) has acted generally with the Administration party; and I say so without any disrespect to the gentleman for he has a right to act with whatever party he pleases, and no one has a right to question his motives. But fair play is a jewel: and my colleague must represent things as they are, not as he would desire to have them for political effect. Sir, this is a little pamphlet, but it contains more Federal poison in a small way, than any thing I ever saw of the kind. It is a little pamphlet, and its whole contents remind me of a minow catching. I live near a river called the little Miami; and into it there empties a creek called Sycamore. I fish in the river, and my boy catches minnows in the creek for bait. It is this last operation that the contents of this little pamphlet remind me of. It is a system of a small kind of fault-finding; and yet I am told that there is not a foul stream of Federalism in the Union, on which it does not float. Every corrupt bought-up Federal press in these United States, I am told, has given it insertion in its columns; and the mails have groaned under the weight of its multiplied numbers, by the franking privilege, ever since it made its appearance.

Sir, seeing, on one occasion, a great number of Federal members engaged busily in franking documents my curiosity induced me to walk round among them to inquire what documents they were franking for distribution. I asked one; Mr. Bond's speech; another; Mr. Bond's speech; another; Mr. Bond's speech another; Mr. Bond's speech; and so on. This led me to a perusal of my colleague's speech, and the vast circulation which was given to it for political effect, induced me to collect some statistics by which I might neutralize any pernicious effect his speech might have on the political atmosphere. Those statistics I have procured, and have them in my hand, and will ask that they may constitute a part of my speech, which I design to write out more fully than time will now permit to deliver.

But to the speech. My colleage complains that within the last 9 years, there has been an increase of public officers and of public expenditures, which he charges as a fault of the party in power. It is their fault, too, I suppose, that within the same time, two new states have been added to our Union, and several millions of people to our population. If public officers have been increased, so has public business, and in a much greater ratio As a matter of course, an increase of expenditures must follow. If this be an evil, it can only be cured by stopping the extension of our settlements and the increase of our population. There is a large increase of clerks in the New York custom house: but the business there has been more than doubled. There has been a large increase of clerks in the Land Office; but the business of that office has increased tenfold. It was physically impossible that the President could sign the increased number of Land patents, and yet is made an offence to create another officer for that purpose. There has been some increase of clerks in the War Department; but the business of that Department has been more than doubled. The number of Postmasters has been doubled, and so has the number of post offices, for the convenience of the people.

Would our federal reformers have 6 or 7000 post offices discontinued, to avoid an increase of Executive officers? Would they shut up the land offices because to keep them open requires an increase of officers? Do the people want any such reform? Would they deny patents to purchasers of lands because it takes a few additional clerks to make them out? If all the business of all the departments remain undone, because it requires more clerks to do it as it increases with the growth of our country? These would be reforms worthy of Federal Bank Reformers! Let the business of the people's government remain undone, and the Banks will govern for the people.

There are few offices, if any, in the country in which the public business has not increased faster than the clerks and the expenditures. As our country increases, the public officers and expenditures must and will increase. It is as stupid as wicked to complain of the party in power on account of this increase, for no party can prevent it and do its duty to the country. The only inquiry should be whether there are too many clerks to do the public business. If so they should be lopped off. But no such thing is alleged. It is not asserted that they have not enough to do, or that the public business could possibly be done without them.

These Bank reformers propose no measures to retrench because they know that no retrenchment can be made, but seek only to fill the country with false impressions, for the sake of producing political results favorable to the federal bank cause. The game of base and foul lying, to get into power, is as old as Absalom the son of David, and as dirty. My colleague undertakes to arraign certain members of the Administration for having in some instances received payment for extra services. But does he pretend that any one of them has received such compensation in violation of law? Not at all. He knows that the principles upon which those allowances were made have been repeatedly adjudicated upon and sanctioned by the Supreme Court, the highest judicial tribunal in the country. The allowances therefore were all lawful. Is the principle wrong? If gentlemen think so, why do they not bring forth a proposition making all such allowances unlawful? If they were really in favor of a reform, or change in this respect, should we not see them proving it by acts rather than by words? They have had a majority in this house during this seven month's session, and yet have made no attempts at reform of any kind.

Perhaps my colleague may have thought the prospect discouraging; but he ought not to have stopped on that account. If he will try, he may succeed, and if he does he will render essential service to his country, and crown himself with laurels. But, sir, the fact that they content themselves with mere clamor, without attempting to do anything about reform, is conclusive that they do not believe there is any thing wrong in the principle, and have only one object in view, that is to put others out of office that they may get in. How they would treat those now in the public money while in office, and how they may be expected to use it again, I will attempt to show before I have done.

But my colleague brings a general charge against the party in power who by their representatives in part (Col. Benton, Mr. Cambreleng, and others,) had promised something like reform, (if they should get into power) in abuses which they said existed, and which they set out in a report on that subject, and which my colleague has presented in a garbled manner to the public. Does my colleague not know that many of the abuses contained in that report, grew out of the manner in which the powers that then existed got into office, and the corrupt manner by which they held the administration of the government? The government fountain being corrupt, all the streams that flowed from it conveyed abuse and violation wherever they reached; and that by a reformation of the Administration, most of the abuses that flowed from it were dried up; which in a great degree, superseded the necessity of further reform. Some abuses still remained; they were reformed in part, as I will show you before I am done. Some remain unreformed and always will, as they do in all governments, and are of a miserable and incurable character. For, sir, the people have made that general reformation, by pulling down an administration that had its origin in acorrupt bargain, and existed in violation of the spirit of the constitution, and the sacred right of the elective franchise.

Here, sir, permit me to name some of the objections my colleague presents to the public against this administration. Some of the practices which he denounces as corrupt and still enforce-notwithstanding the reform the people were promised; and permit me to compare these practices, that he is pleased to denounce as corrupt, with those of a similar character, but a thousand times more aggravating, as practised by the administration of Messrs. Clay and Adams, which is urged upon us as worthy of example, and entitled to the confidence of the American people, and soon to be revived.

My colleague complains that the aggregate expenses of the Government far exceeds the expense of the Administration of the dynasty which he wishes revived.

That there is an additional number of clerks in all the Departments, and consequently an unnecessary expense incurred to the Government. Such is the character of his charges against each of the departments of Government.

And now, sir, I proceed to answer the gentleman on some of these charges, and I trust, I shall yet be only able to prove many of these destitute of foundation in truth, but that the gentleman has withheld many important truths in relation to reforms and abuses, which it is due to this Administration that the people should know.

Sir, there is very little difference in the moral offence of withholding the truth, wherein may be due to reputation and character that it should be told, and telling that which is wilfully false. The gentleman constantly indulges, I hold up to view the coalition administration Adams and Clay as a mirror, in which is to be seen a pure Administration. I think sir, we will find some corruptions charged to this and the last Administrations, which will be found to have been practiced with impunity in that. One of the great violations of economy and extravagant expenditures of the administration of General Jackson was sending Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Randolph severally, as Ministers to Russia, with a salary of $9000 per annum, and an outfit of $9000; that each of them staid but a year and a day, and then returned. Now, sir, let us see if we can offset this useless expenditure of General Jackson's administration by one of a similar character in the administration of Messrs. Adams and Clay. During the immaculate dynasty which my colleague desires to have renewed, no less than three ministers were sent to England, viz. King, Barbour, and Gallatin, with an annual salary of $9000, and an outfit of $9000. This made 27,000 in outfit besides the annual salary, which amounted to the same. Also the son of Rufus King, who was left Secretary of Legation, was left by his father as Charge d'Affairs, who received an outfit of $4,500 although (being there) he had not to fit out at all.

Then the account for money expended for keeping up our legation in England during that short reign of corruption and bargain, which only lasted 4 years was—

Outfit for R. King	$9,000
" for A. Gallatin	9,000
" for J. Barbour	9,000
" for Mr. King's son; who never was fitted out	4,500
Salary for do	4,500
" Ministers	27,000
	$63,000

Yes, sir, 63,000 was spent during that Administration, to procure the discharge of the diplomatic duties of one single individual. I think this will office the Russia diplomatic story. My colleague had better have kept that story in the dark, as his reform is a kind of one-sided reform. My colleague says that the State Department sent Mr. Early to Bogata with despatches, and that he never delivered them, but received his pay. Well sir, this was a hard case, and, taken in the abstract smacks of fraud and improvidence. But what is the whole story? Mr. Early was sent to Bogata with despatches; when on the way, and within two days of St Thomas, the vessel in which he had taken passage caught fire. There was a cargo of powder on board. The crew and passengers, amounting to nineteen in all, were instantly to save their lives, compelled to take to the boats, two in number. They had left the vessel but half an hour when she blew up; and with her went the despatches. After the lapse of seventy-four hours without water or food, the famished crew reached the Island of Hayti, from whence they got home as well as they could. I believe Mr. Early was paid the same as though he had delivered the despatches. Perhaps this was wrong; but I can point you something worse under the coalition administration.

Mr. Clay [Secretary of State] sent Mr. Pleasants to Buenos Ayres with despatches. It is said that he found the crew rather unpleasant, (he being a pleasant man,) being principally mechanics and workies, and not the white fingered gentry. He put the despatches in the possession of the Captain and he wheeled about and put for England, where he amused himself in high life a time and returned for which Mr. Clay paid him 1940 dollars. So I think this will offset the charge of paying Mr. Early.

So far, I think my colleague has been unfortunate in his charges, in as much as they have the effect to call to recollection charges against the dynasty he wishes to reinstate, much more aggrating and pernicious. This, so far, seems to be a blunder on his part; but the worst have to other of his speech will be unfortunate for his party and his purposes. Another most important blunder has been committed by my colleague in his "few comments on the professions and practice of Amos Kendall, late Fourth Auditor, now Postmaster General." He quotes from certain letters of that gentleman, published soon after he came into office, showing some of the abuses he found in office, committed by my colleague's political friends, and showing, also, that he had or would reform them, and affects to show that he had not done so. One of these extracts is as follows, viz: "The interest of the country demands that this office shall be filled with men of business, and not with balmbing-politicians." Can any man say with truth that this principle was not carried out?

The Upper Canada Emigration Association have sent a deputation to Iowa to select a scite for the intended City of Refuge. The company is divided into 500 shares of $100 each, no individual to take more than five shares, and to pay more than 10 per cent on subscribing.

For the Plainfield Union.

TO A NEIGHBORING MOUNTAIN.

Eternal mountain! round thy craggy brow,
The storms of centuries have played,—the deep
Lone and dread thunder speaks to thee—yet thou
Unchanged, sublimely beautiful, dost sleep
Alike when sunset clouds their splendors fling
Around thy form, or when the shadowy wing
Of gathering tempest, or the thunder cloud,
Clothe all thy glories in a murky shroud.
The works of art shall crumble into nought,
But thou shalt stand the same—shalt raise in air
Thy changeless form,—to chain each wand'ring thought,
And show the hand of God imprinted there.

MISCELLANEOUS.

[From Miss. Martineau's Western Travel.]

Amos Kendall.—I was fortunate enough once to catch a glimpse of the invisible Amos Kendall at Washington, one of the most remarkable men, in America. He is supposed to be the moving spring of the whole Administration; the thinker, planner and doer; but it is all in the dark. Documents are issued of an excellence which prevents their being attributed to persons who take the responsibility of them; a correspondence is kept up all over the country for which no one seems to be answerable; work is done, of goblin extent and with goblin speed, which makes men look about them with a superstitious wonder; and the invisible Amos Kendall has the credit of it all.

President's Jackson's Letters to his Cabinet are said to be Kendall's. The letters from Washington to appear in remote country newspapers, whence they are collected and published in the Globe, as demonstrations of public opinion, are pronounced to be written by Kendall. Every mysterious paragraph in opposition newspapers relates to Kendall—and it is some relief to the mind that his having now the office of Postmaster General affords opportunity for open attacks upon this twilight personage—who is proved, by the fault in the post office administration not to be able to do quite every thing well. But he is undoubtedly a great genius. He unites with his "great talent for silence" a splendid audacity.

It is clear that he could not do the work he does, (incredible in sun ant any way,) if he went into society like other men. He did, however, one evening; I think it was at the Attorney General's. The moment I went in, intimations reached me from all quarters, amid nods and winks, "Kendall is here"—"That is he." I saw at once that his plea for exclusion (bad health) is no false one. The extreme sallowness of his complexion, and hair of such perfect whiteness as is rarely seen in a man of middle age, testified to disease. His countenance does not help the superstitious to throw off their dread of him. He probably does not desire this superstition to melt away; for there is no calculating how much influence was given to Jackson's administration by the belief, that there was a concealed eye and hand behind the machinery of Government, by which every thing could be foreseen, and the hardest deeds done—A member of Congress told me this night that he had watched through four sessions for a sight at Kendall, and had never obtained it till now. Kendall was leaning on a chair with his head bent down, and eye glancing up at a member of Congress, with whom he was in earnest conversation, and in a few minutes he was gone.

Neither Mr. Clay nor any of his family ever spoke a word to me of Kendall except in his present capacity; But I heard elsewhere and repeatedly, the well known story of the connection of the two men early in Kendall's life. Tidings reached Mrs. Clay one evening, many years ago, at their house in the neighborhood of Lexington, Kentucky, that a young man solitary and poor, lay ill of a fever in the noisy hotel in the town. Mrs. Clay went down in the carriage without delay, and brought the sufferer home to her house, where she nursed him with her own hands til he recovered. Mr. Clay was struck with the talents and knowledge of the young man, Kendall, and retained him as tutor to his sons, heaping benefits upon him with characteristic bounty. Thus far is notorious fact. As to the causes of their separation and enmity I have not heard Kendall's side of the question, and the reform say nothing; but go on to the other notorious fact, that Amos Kendall left Mr. Clay's political party some time after Adams had been, by Mr. Clay's influence, seated in the presidential chair, and went over to Jackson; since which time he has never ceased his persecutions of Mr. Clay through the newspapers.

A Yankee, it appears is the author of the present "British and American Steam Navigation Company." A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, at Litchfield Conn., traces it to the exertions of Mr. Junius Smith, a native of that place, who graduated at Yale College in 1802, and was afterwards admitted to the bar in New Haven. Being employed by a company to prosecute some claim in London, Mr. S. was induced to remain there, where he married and engaged in commercial pursuits, having now resided near London for about 30 years.

He visited this country, I believe in 1831 or 1832: then he suggested this plan of navigating the waters of the Atlantic by steam to several distinguished merchants of your city; they looked upon the scheme like many others as not only visionary but really impracticable; he returned to London still full of confidence that he should ultimately succeed; and amid many embarrassments and discouragements before which an ordinary mind would have quailed he persevered until at length the "British and American Steam Navigation Company" was created by an act of Parliament and now we behold a complete triumph calculated to effect a conference to change the entire commercial relations of our country with Europe."

Scene in a Western Inn.—"Hello you, master tavernkeeper, what's to get for supper?"

Barkeeper.—"Most any thing I reckon—smoked pork, eggs—"

Stranger.—(With a half stifled sneer.) "Yes got everything—but heavens, its all one thing I (turning to me,) Did you ever see such a pork country? Pigs all nose and legs! And how they run! Why I think o' takin' one on 'em to the Long Island course—sure to win! Well, landlord, how's liquor? Fourpence, I s'pose—now I never paid but three cents till I came into these parts, (to me,) I kerry five cent pieces; what do you? Aint it darn strange why they don't make use of cents? Devil! I'd no idee on't—brought one lag on speculation—guess it's no go! I shant eat no pork to-night—had enough on't—do up an old hen, landlord—I must have so'thing different if I have to pay ninepence extra for it! * * * (Silence for a short space.) But oh! look at there you! three beds one top o' t'nother! How'd that come about? Wonder who roosts in the top one?"

"Oh you! I jest bought two city lots in Shakspeare—noble site warton—here's a the deed—numbers 245, and 61, corner lots—both on 'em—they are—that's sure—yes, here they be, in Broadway—Precisely square! you consider—oh they must sell! Bear in mind the locate on 'em—great names to them streets—600 people there now—growing—yes, a darned sight faster 'n your grain! How far is it from here? Any one ye know?"

Spectator.—"There is no town is this state by that name."

Stranger.—(Almost petrified with conflicting emotions.) "Yer—yer—you don't—pretend for to say that there aint no town by that name? Pertater eyes cut in halves? I see—I see clearly through this day's business—(gasping) done out of horse and wagon! conscience sake, they cost me rising a hundred dollars! Done out of that too, besides the lug of cents! Well, who'd a thought it? The man looked honest—gin him my team for 'em, and he signed the deed and said how there couldn't be no mistake—don't know as there was—nuther think 'twas intentionally! A Pike take in a Yarmouther! 'twouldn't do to let that creep into the papers!"

"Landlord, don't know as I care about the hen—you needn't cook it—p'raps I can catch up with that feller—I've out walked a hoss afore today. Here's for it!" Off like a streak of chalk

Philosophy of Advertising.—It may be worth while to communicate to young tradesmen the ideas of an old one on this subject; they are simply and briefly as follows:

The first utility of frequent and regular advertising consists in this; there is at all times a large class of persons, both in country and town, who have no fixed places for their purchase of necessary articles, and are ready to be swayed and drawn to any particular place which is earnestly brought under their notice. Indifferent to all, they yield without hesitation to the first who asks. Then in the country, a considerable number of persons, who wish a supply of the articles advertised, and do not know of any particular place where it is to be got, being thus furnished with the address of a person who can supply them, naturally open a communication with that address, which perhaps, leads to much ulterior business. People in the country are also liable to be morably impressed by the frequent sight of a name in a newspaper. The advertising party acquires distinction in their eyes, and thus they are led in making a choice to prefer him. But by far the most important effect of advertising is one of an indirect nature; it conveys the impression that the party—pretending or not pretending, quackish or not quackish—is anxious for business. One who is anxious for business is unavoidably supposed to be an industrious active person, who keeps the best of articles, and who conducts his affairs every thing in the neatest and most trades manlike manner, and in general uses every expedient to gratify and attract customers. People of course, like to purchase under such circumstances, and the system of advertising assuring them that such circumstances exist at the particular shop, they select it accordingly. Such are the opinions of the old tradesman alluded to, and they are, certainly, supported by fact; for wherever an extensive or regular system of advertising is practised, and no back dealing or accompanying circumstances exist, it is usually seen to be attended with a considerable success. One feature in the philosophy of the subject must be carefully attended to. A faint and infrequent system of advertising does not succeed even in proportion. Drink deep or taste not the Pierian spring.

SUN-FLOWERS.—A writer in the Southern Agriculturist, who cultivates sun-flowers as the rarest of all feeds to every thing domestic, (Virginia fence remember has a corner at every intersection of roads or once in every twelve feet) says that about the time his long forage give out these begin to bloom. As the blossoms begin to appear, he cuts them off about a foot from the ground, and gives them to his horses which eat them very readily, leaves, buds, stocks and all. This he considers a very wholesome as well as nutricious food. Thus the ground that has to be kept clean to prevent unwelcome visitors, is made in the mean time to yield profitably.

The name of Lake George, it was resolved at a large dinner party on board a new Steamboat on the 12th inst. should be dropped, and the original Indian name restored; which is Horicon—meaning the Lake of Silver Waters. Newspapers were requested to notice it. The original change was made to compliment the British King.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday Evening, July 31, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

RAIL ROAD through PLAINFIELD.

There being some difference of opinion as to whether the Rail Road through Plainfield should be laid on 3d or 4th street, and the Executive Committee of the Rail Road Company appearing willing to take the street preferred by the greatest number of those interested in the question—all such persons are requested to meet at Thorn's Tavern on the afternoon of Wednesday next, at 4 o'clock,—a full attendance is requested.

By order of the People.

Plainfield, July 28th.

☞ In giving the account of the serious accident which befel Mr. John Giles of New Market, in our last paper, we made it to appear rather worse than it in fact was. We told it as 'twas told to us. We have been informed by the attending physician that it was a fracture of the hip, a very serious misfortune, the consequences of which, Mr. Giles will long feel, but that as yet no doubts have been entertained of his recovery.

FOREIGN.

20 Days Later.—The expected steam packet, Royal William, arrived in New York, on Tuesday evening last, 18 days and a half from Liverpool, and 16 1-2 from Cork. She brought 30 passengers—had 11 days of head winds, and accomplished half of the passage in 7 days.

The papers are filled with accounts of the Coronation of Queen Victoria, which took place on the 28th of June. The procession was splendid, and the ceremony in the Abbey was imposing in the extreme, but it would occupy too much room to give even a summary description of it. The costumed value of the jewels alone contained in the crown worn by the Queen, is over half a million of dollars. The members of the American Embassy were in the procession, in two plain but chaste and elegant carriages, emblematical of our republican simplicity.

There appears but very little news of general interest. The markets continued as they had been. A favorable change in American stocks.

The Great Western had 60 passengers engaged when the Royal William sailed.

Mr. John Van Buren, son of the President, Gov. Cass, and Col. Thorne were presented to the Queen, June 20th.

Miss Landon, the poet, is married to the Governor of Cape Coast, Africa.

We last week finished the publication of the speech of Mr. Bond, and have this week commenced the reply to it, by Mr. Duncan, of the same state. We advise all politicians to read both, for each contains much truth, which the most each man must decide for himself. Though the two speeches are as diverse as possible, they are not contradictory, and the principal items stated as facts, contained in both may be true. A great fault in Mr. Duncan's speech, is, that the language is too violent, and ungentlemanly—he uses the term, Federal bank whigs much too often,—all this is inexcusable,—and in this respect his speech is inferior to that of his colleague.—We should say of Mr. Bond's speech, that he had been a year or more in writing it, and had discovered, with much pains-taking, every little fault and want of economy in the whole batch of office holders, and their name is legion, and presented them to the public. The short article which he said he cut from the Globe a year previous, in which he, Mr. Bond, is styled a reprieved debtor, influences us to this opinion. However, his statements are as much entitled to credit as Mr. Duncan's.

It is stated in the Intelligencer that Mr. Duncan did not actually deliver all of his speech in the House, from want of time. The following short extract from the minutes of the proceedings of the last night of the session, will explain:

Mr. Duncan rose, but, having been refused permission to proceed, objection was made to his going on. He said he held a book in his hand, [understood to be Mr. Bond's speech,] out of which he wished to make a speech. But, if the committee would permit him to write it out, and call it his speech in Committee of the Whole, he would do so. Loud cries of agreed! from all quarters of the House ensued, and Mr. Duncan sat down.

Mr. Bond hoped that his colleague would state in such written speech that it was not delivered in the presence of a member to whom it was a reply.

Both of these speeches conclusively prove what we have always much feared, the iniquity which exists in high places. We have had many proofs of this of late, and all go to show that it is not confined to one party—that one party is as dishonest, immoral and bullying as the other, and to choose between them some other criterion must be taken. For our own part, being unwilling to take any other criterion than honesty and uprightness, we are altogether unable to choose between the two.

As many may be like minded with us in this matter, let the party leaders nominate men of uprightness and integrity, if they would get votes; and let the people vote for such men, if they would have the wickedness of our rulers to cease, and our government to stand. This extravagance and want of reform, this fighting, duelling and intemperance, are the fault of the people,—choose better men—choose men who will not do such things, without regard to party.

We have taken into consideration that by publishing these long speeches we diminish the quantity of reading matter of those who are not politicians, and for their benefit have added two columns a othe 4th page, and intend to add another in our next paper.

☞ We much regret to say that in the poetical article by "E. C. S." which we published last week, a line was omitted, which very much mars the sense, as such accidents always will. The omission was in the third paragraph, between the ninth and tenth lines. The omitted line with the preceding and succeeding one, reads as follows:

"Had then that smiten one no friend t' ah yes!
Perchance that moment, in his home far north,
A mother (and a widow, though unwarned."

The cause of the mistake was, we were absent a part of the week, and the article was put into type during our absence, which probably would not otherwise have occurred.

We entirely agree with our correspondent R. in his remarks on the following article. The subject is of much importance, and we hope that every owner of a dog will consider that one human life is worth more than all the dogs in the county, and will confine their dogs at least to the end of August. If you do not, we hope your neighbors will kill them for you.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

WHIPPANY MORRIS Co., July 26, 1838.

I have witnessed during the past night, one of the most distressing scenes that ever took place in our village. Mr. James Bogus, a respectable mechanic, aged about 24 years, died this morning at 5 o'clock with that truly awful disease, Hydrophobia. The first symptoms of the malady were not shown until Tuesday evening 24th inst. when his friends were about to apply warm water to his feet. He shuddered at the sight. He ate a hearty breakfast yesterday morning, but could not drink anything with it.

He enquired of the owner of the dog that bit him, about 6 weeks since. He thought the dog was mad. An examination was given, when he replied—the dog was mad—and I am a dead man! About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, he had some light spasms—which continued to increase until he died. At 11 o'clock last evening we succeeded in getting a straight jacket upon him, when he was chained to the floor. At intervals he would be as rational as ever and agreed with us upon the propriety of this confinement. At one time he cried out, kill your dogs! kill your dogs!

A scene of this kind beggars all description. He was a native of the village, and his Father, Mother and Sisters all among us. This afflictive Providence has thrown a gloom over the whole vicinity. T.

We would seriously call the attention of the community to the above account, and to the subject of mad dogs, generally.

It is the time of the year now, when hydrophobia is most apt to prevail, and the utmost care to prevent the occurrence of this dreadful disorder should be taken in time. In larger towns no dogs whatsoever are permitted to run at large without being muzzled. But in and around Plainfield the greatest carelessness exists, and dogs habitually cross and snappish are abroad every day in our streets. If the owners of such animals will not shut them up or kill them, any person is justifiable in destroying them at all hazards. The heartrending relation above, is enough to move every owner of a dog to tie up or destroy him, lest he himself or some one of his family fall the first victim of his neglect.

We repeat it again, let the owners of dogs beware—the alarm of hydrophobia is spreading, and if they wish their curs to live, let them be fastened up at home, or their lives will be sacrificed. R.

Mr. Charles George, proprietor of the Huntedon Gazette, a strong Van Buren paper, a week or two since disposed of it to Mr. John B. Brown, of Pennsylvania, who has since changed its politics into whig.

The New Brunswick Times, one of the best papers in this state, is now conducted solely by Lewis R. Stelle, formerly junior partner.

The Poughkeepsie Journal, formerly a Jackson paper, and latterly a Conservative, now hoists the whig flag. The New York Times, a Conservative has place the name of Henry Clay, at the head of its columns.

Mr. Tallmadge is a man of unbounded influence in the empire state.

Some mischievous person was wicked enough on Thursday to set fire to the Railroad bridge over the Rancocus, near Burlington. The company have offered $200 for the apprehension of the incendiary.

Land Jobbers.—It is expected that all the banks in the United States will simultaneously resume specie payments on Monday, the 13th of August. Good times are near at hand. Let the day be celebrated.

Many new banks are soon to go into operation under the general banking law in the State of New York. It is generally conceded that the banking system in that state is the best of any in the Union. Though enacted in a great measure by whigs, it is of loco foco origin. Mr. Leggett, the great advocate of loco focoism, has been ardently contending for it for years.

To our very great surprise, the Van Buren papers are finding fault with Gov. Ritner's proclamation requiring specie payments.—Frestonian

Why so much surprise? Did you, too, expect that the Van Buren party was the party in favor of resumption? It seems so.

The article on our fourth page, disclosing the secrets of lobbying is very instructive as well as amusing—Another proof of wrong doing on the part of our law-makers. We can now clearly see how so many bank charters were obtained, during the two years before the suspension of specie payments, to the great injury of the people at large. Lobbying aid it, the disgraceful secrets of which are here fully and authentically disclosed. The plaintiff was served right, he deserved nothing for such services,—and it would be well if his employer were also obliged to lose as much, if it could go into the possession of an honest man.

Thirty thousand dollars in gold have been recently drawn out of the U. S. Mint to be carried west. The whig papers say that it is done to influence the elections, which take place in Illinois and Missouri, on Monday next. At least, they hint as much.

On Tuesday last a public dinner was given in honor of Daniel Webster, at Faneuil Hall, Boston. The assembly was unprecedently large. Mr. Prentiss, of Mississippi, was present.

A splendid and well executed full-length portrait of Queen Victoria has lately been exhibiting in Newark. It is highly spoken of by the papers generally.

For the Plainfield Union.

Mr. Editor:

In looking over your columns of last week my eye rested on a communication by V. S. and while I would treat that gentleman with gred defference and respect, I must beg leave to dissent on some points. I think the expression, 'the principles of modern abolition are from the bottomless pit,' has left on the minds of his hearers no other than the impression that it is the work of some "Demon God," from beginning to end.

He admits that it was first taken into consideration by benevolent men. This is true; they were men of sterling principles and of eminent piety, men renowned for their moral courage and moral rectitude. But, says the writer by the influence of some evil spirit they were urged to amalgamate ultra principles with their former ones, and in this manner the; have degenerated into modern abolitionism or ultra principles which terms the writer considers synonomous. This is a mistake, but that a certain class, who never had a dozen thoughts in their lives, look upon this as a fact I will not deny. From the origin of the Anti-Slavery society to the present time, there has been no change in principle,—the first doctrines held by that society are sustained in all their purity by the true friends of the cause at the present day. I know of no distinction between ancient and "modern abolitionism," and I venture to assert that no such distinction is known among abolitionists nay they would utterly disclaim it.

That there are "ultraists," who pretend to be patrons of this cause no one will deny, but this does not at all argue again t the society. In every age there have been ultraists in the Church of God, and even hot, headed zealots

"Who stole the livery of Heaven,
To serve the devil in."

Does this argue against Christianity? Certainly not. Neither does it argue against abolition that some of its supporters are actuated by a wild and enthusiastic zeal; but, by the way, the greater part of the ultraism supposed to exist among the abolitionists, can only be found in the imaginations of their opposers.

But the writer gives us an exposition of "ultra principles" i. e. those followed by alarming excitements. Is this indeed a proof of ultraism? Is the religion of Jesus Christ ultraism?—For nothing has ever been followed by more alarming excitements or more bloody persecutions. Is the temperance reform ultraism? Was the Reformation in the time of Luther, ultraism? They were followed by unhallowed excitements; as is every great and good cause.

This very opposition is strong evidence that it is a good cause, and that it will prevail is as certain as it is that truth will prevail over error.

A Friend of Abolition.

Whig State Convention.

Delegates to the Whig State Convention, for the purpose of selecting a ticket to be supported by the whigs, for members to the next Congress at the election on the 9th and 10th days of October next, will meet at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 5th of September next, at 10 A. M.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic Electors of this State will meet by delegates at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 29th of August, at 10 A. M. to select a Congressional ticket to be presented to the people for their support at the ensuing election in October.

Essex Whig Convention.

The Whigs of Essex County will meet at the house of B. Day, in Orange, on Saturday, the 25th day of August, to appoint delegates to the state convention, and such other business as may be deemed exedient.

How to ruin a Son.—1. Let him have his own way.
2. Allow him free use of money.
3. Suffer him to rove where he pleases on the Sabbath.
4. Give him full access to wicked company.
5. Call him to no account for his evenings.
6. Furnish him with no stated employment.

Pursue either one of these ways, and you will have to mourn over a debased and ruined child: Thousands have experienced the sad result and have gone mourning to the grave.—Phila. Obs

Bloody Affray at Ottawa Ill.—We learned yesterday by a gentleman from Ottawa that an engagement took place, on the line of the canal, a day or two previous, between two parties of the workmen, which resulted in the death of twelve or fifteen of them, those engaged in the affray were Irishmen, and it arose on account of the national division amongst them. The militia were called out and the disturbances quelled.—St. Louis Republican.

Exploring Expedition Retired.—The Norfolk papers state, that on Friday last the sloops of war Vincennes and Peacock dropped down from the navy yard to the naval anchorage. The ships have had considerable alterations made upon them to fit them for the peculiar service in which they are to be employed, having had spar decks raised and state rooms built upon the gun decks—thus being made to resemble small frigates. No time is yet definitely fixed for their sailing, but it is supposed that they will get off some time in August.

A pumpkin vine on the premises of Mr. Merrick Martin, toll gate keeper, near Rahway, grew 23 inches in forty eight hours. The seeds were from a pumpkin which weighed 72 pounds.—Rahway Herald.

The Mormons.—It is stated in the Canton Ohio Repository, that this people, to the number of about 1206 with 157 wagons, filled with furniture, cattle, &c, have left Geauga county, on their way to the 'promised land' in Missouri.—They pitch their tents in the open fields at night, after the manner of the ancient Israelites.

Sam Patch out jumped.—We have been credibly informed that during the past week, an individual in a fit of intoxication, fell into a well in the township of Greenwich, which had been walled up so as not to exceed three feet in diameter, and which was eighty feet deep, containing fifteen feet of water; and strange as it may appear, was taken out without having sustained any other injury than what might be expected from a "cold water" bath, and rubbing a small portion of bark off one of his shins.—[Warren N. Singular Death.—In Newport, very suddenly on Monday morning last, Miss Betsey Lear, aged 27. A physician was called to make a post mortem examination, when he found the heart badly lacerated against the point of a darning needle sticking between the ribs. She had a play ful scuffle with a small boy about 24 hours before her death, when the needle was probably forced into her side.—(Belfast Democrat.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and intelligence, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservation, and for true freedom. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or dimtany lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we intend to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired. All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

POETICAL.

For the Plainfield Union.

Our village has a pleasant look,
A happy look as e'er was seen—
Bright through the valley flows a brook
Which winds in many a flowery nook
And freshens all the green.

On either side we can explore,
A row of cottages you see—
And jessamine is clustered o'er
The humble trellis of each door,
Then left to clamber free.

And shakes its blossoms far and wide,
And leaves a long perfume,
O'er all the white-washed cottages' side,
And zephyrs round them sweetly glide
In pellar, hall and room.

As dying evening sinks away,
The sky serene and clear,
The churches stand erect and gray,
While up and down the people stray,
No lords nor nobles here.

Although there is a few that would,
If they had power enough,
Be lords and nobles if they could,
And all that's wanting is a hood,
But times are rather tough.

New York City Common Pleas.—July 18.

Judge Ulchoeffer presiding.

Abraham S. Hillyer vs. John Travers.

Lobbying.—This was an action for work and labor, or in other words, for acting as agent in procuring the passage of a bill through the Trenton Legislature, by means of what is called lobbying.

Counsel for the Plaintiff stated that the defendant employed him in the winter of 1837, as agent to obtain the passage of an act to incorporate the Bergen Port Company, and that for this service the plaintiff claimed $2,000 being less than what he was fairly entitled to. The bill in question was passed, and the defendant was made President of the company.

The following are the items of the plaintiff's demands.

1837.	Dr. to A. T. Hillyer.
To work and labor from Jan. 1st to March 15, 1837, in procuring charter of Bergen Port Company,	$1500 00
To board at Trenton from Jan. 1st to March 15, at $2 per day	150 00
To money paid, laid out and expended for defendant by plaintiff	250 00
To travelling expenses to and from New York and Trenton	100 00
To expenses of family in New York agreed to be paid by defendant—11 weeks at $20 per week,	220 00
	$2220 00

In proof of the plaintiff's services and employment by the defendant, the deposition of a witness was read which stated that the plaintiff had attended at Trenton during the whole time that the act was being passed; that he had been desired to do so by the defendant, and that he advocated the passing of the act, and obtained two or three votes for it in the lower house; that while thus engaged, the plaintiff had treated the members of the Legislature to several bottles of champagne; that the witness in question was himself similarly employed, and had received 100 shares of the stock for his services.

From the evidence of Benjamin Van Cleef, it appeared that the defendant had employed the plaintiff to facilitate the passage of the bill, and also, that John Swartwout had offered the plaintiff $2500 or 25 shares of the stock, to procure the passage of a bill of incorporation for him. That the plaintiff was employed lobbying while the bill was going forward, and endeavored to impress upon the members of the Legislature, the great value such incorporation would be to the state. The different members of the Legislature were also visited in order to ascertain how many of them were favorable to the bill, and those who were not were divided amongst the lobbyers in order to be influenced to vote for it. The bill was lost the first time it was brought up from the Lower House, but the plaintiff procured a sufficient number of members to vote for a reconsideration. At the period in question, the legislature entertained great distrust of such bills.

Mr. Van Cleef himself was also employed to facilitate the passage of the bill and was to be compensated for his services by being appointed Secretary, at a salary of $500 for the first year. He was likewise to be paid $300 per annum for editing a democratic journal, which the parties who were getting the bill, pledged themselves to establish, and he was also to have the liberty of of exercising his profession, which in addition to the other items would bring him $1500 per annum. The witness estimated the plaintiff's personal expenses at 2 dollars per day, and 2 dollars for board.

On the witnesses cross examination, he said that one of the means which the plaintiff used to facilitate the passage of the bill, was by treating the members to champagne and suppers, and that he gave a supper on the 22d of February, while the bill was pending. The defendant had promised to pay a tavern keeper a bill which the plaintiff had incurred for 114 dollars.

The land in question, in relation to which the act of incorporation was passed was purchased by the Company for $160,000, and divided into 5000 shares of stock at $100 a share, making 500,000 The shares are now 40 per cent. below par.—Col. Travers, the defendant is said to be worth 150,000 dollars.

The next evidence for the plaintiff was the deposition of James C. Zabriskie, of New Brunswick, N. J. who deposed that he was asked by Travers to engage in getting the bill passed, but he refused. Travers said that witness might dictate his own terms, and if he wanted means to operate with at Trenton, any reasonable amount would be furnished.

Q. What would be a reasonable amount to operate with at Trenton, in such a case.

A, I should have required 500 dollars to operate with.

Cross-Examined.—Q. When you say you would require $500 to operate with, what do you mean by that?

A. I mean I should have applied it in paying for wine and terrapin suppers, as that is about as efficient a mode of operating as I know of.

Q. Do you mean by that answer, wine and terrapin suppers for the members of the Legislature?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What was the general character of Mr. Hillyer's services?

A. He operated among the members generally and particularly; Mr. Hillyer was esteemed one of the best lobby members that ever appeared at Trenton for the last eight years. I do not know what Mr. Hillyer's particular mode of operation was in this case. I know the efficient mode of operation was the same in every case, by calling on the members and impressing them favorably in regard to the measure before them. Sometimes making the worse appear the better reason, and giving the members explanatory suppers. Such was Mr. Hillyer's general mode of operation.

On behalf of the defendant. Counsel moved for a non-suit on the ground that the entire contract was grounded on corruption and was therefore void.

The Court decided that the case should go to the Jury.

The defendant then produced in evidence a receipt from the plaintiff to the defendant, dated March 13, for $100 on account of the Bergen Port company, which receipt counsel contended was in full for all compensation which he was entitled to. The defendant offered no other evidence. The Court charged the Jury. This was an action to recover compensation for the plaintiff's agency in getting a bill passed by the legislature at Trenton.

It appears that the plaintiff has been paid $100 by the defendant on the 13th of March, and that the defendant likewise agreed to pay 114 more for the plaintiff's board. It may be, and is probable, that the defendant is not bound by that agreement, as it was entered into after the debt was contracted, and that the landlord cannot make the defendant pay it. But it is evidence going to show that the defendant employed the plaintiff.

The first question is, is there sufficient evidence to prove that the defendant employed the plaintiff. The latter is bound to prove that the defendant employed him to go to Trenton. If you are satisfied that the defendant did not employ the plaintiff, he cannot recover on that ground.

The next question is, was the employment of the plaintiff, by the defendant, for an honest purpose, or for procuring dishonest legislation? If the defendant employed the plaintiff for an honest purpose, then there can be no difficulty in the way of his recovering. But if he was employed for a dishonest purpose then he cannot recover.

The evidence as to the dishonesty of purpose of the two parties in the present transaction, stands about equal. And the rule of law on this part of the question, is that the law does not extend protection to either party. If they have both made an agreement for a dishonest purpose, they must stand as they are. The law will not allow either of them to coerce the other. If Travers had paid the plaintiff, he could not recover it back; and if the plaintiff contracted with Travers, and has not been paid, he cannot make him pay it.

It would be going too far to say that every agreement for compensation in cases like the present one is void. An agreement to compensate an attorney, who goes before the Legislature, or a committee of it, to advocate the passage of a bill would entitle him to recover compensation. So also an agreement with an agent who makes necessary explanations before the Legislature, but nothing in it averse to public policy. But there is a wide difference between this, and an agency for using public or private influence personally on the members, in order to induce them to act from motives of private interest instead of public good. Any agreement for such an agency is void.

It is therefore scarcely necessary to observe that to procure votes by means of suppers, or by purchasing legislators by making application to them, is dishonest in the extreme, and that no person can recover compensation for it.

This is perhaps the first case in which a party has disclosed the secrets of lobbying. I have given you my views as to the law of the case, but am not disposed to take it for granted, as to what your feelings are in regard to the facts. With these remarks, I hope you will give a fair consideration to the evidence, and that while on the one hand if you think the plaintiff was employed for an honest purpose, you will not refuse him compensation, but that if on the other hand, he was employed to bring private influence to bear on the members of the Legislature, then you will not give him any compensation.

The Jury retired for nearly four hours and brought in a verdict for the defendant.

For the plaintiff Philip S. Crooke.

For defendant, James H. Magher.

"I say, Jack," shouted a Smithfield drover the other day, to his pal, "these curned sheep wont move in this weather; lend us a bark of your dog, will you!"

Christiana, queen of Sweden, used to say she loved men, not because they were men, but because they were not women.

Sir John Collier, the miser, used to return thanks that he had been born on the twenty-ninth of February, because then he kept his birth-day only every fourth year.

AYRES & BULLMAN.
Plainfield, Jan. 15, 1838.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N.J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located, and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 00 $4.00
" Higher branches,	5.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel H. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. E. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, todiscipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other populous towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

ALLEN WILSON, Secretary
of the Board of Trustees.
Plainfield, March 7th, 1838. 69 tf

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the old mail road, at Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for this work. Besides on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of prose, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the piano-forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this purpose—notices of the most interesting novelties in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art—engravings, music, &c.—notices of the actual drama, and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied with the first number of the work, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial management of the new volume will be under the charge of EPES SARGENT, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work exists that furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum, as the Mirror.

In no advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were, it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country,—intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle countrywomen, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1 Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super-royal quarto engraving, and once a week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and elegant Index, will be furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications must be post paid, and addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Speech of Mr. Duncan, of Ohio,

In Reply to the Speech of Mr. Bond.—In the House, July 7, 1838.

I assert, sir, and challenge contradiction, that the Fourth Auditor's Office, while Mr. Kendall was in it, was "filled with men of business," and not "with babbling politicians." Mr. Kendall himself was a man of business, and neither he nor his clerks ever neglected their public duties to babble politics with any one. When he went into that office, what did he find to be its condition under the dynasty which my colleague is laboring to restore? Was it all purity, all honesty, all industry? No sir; it was all rottenness, all idleness. His predecessor was one of the Blue Lights of the Clay party; and Mr. Kendall soon discovered that he had been guilty of the grossest and most direct frauds on the Treasury, of which he was found guilty by an unwilling court, and more unwilling jury, after a tremendous party struggle to secure him from punishment. What thanks did Mr. Kendall get from my colleague and his party for exposing these frauds, and bringing them to merited punishment? Why sir, he was abused through the party presses, as a conspirator and persecutor, and while the prosecution of the culprit was in progress, was night after night insulted and hooted and hooted at under the windows. Yes, sir, this was the mode the gentleman's party undertook to prevent the exposure and punishment of their corruptions. This was the reward they then bestowed on integrity and fearlessness in office; and the same game has been kept up since down to the speech of my colleague. Now I ask, was it no reform to remove a peculator upon the Treasury? My colleague does not seem to think so. Why? Is it because it belonged to his party?

Well, Mr. Kendall filled the Fourth Auditor's Office with men of business,' and what was the consequence? Much of its business was one, two and three years in arrears, and in about a twelve month it was brought completely up.—Did he obtain or ask any additional force? No, sir. After the business was brought up, he suffered two clerkships to remain vacant for a long time, and one until he left the office, because having "men of business" about him, he did not need the whole force which the law allowed him. Moreover under the Clay administration, which my colleague would restore, the contingent appropriation for the Fourth Auditor's Office was $1,500 a year, but Mr. Kendall reduced it to 1,000, and 1 year asked for no appropriation at all having enough surplus of former appropriations on hand to meet his wants. Thus the expenditures of the Office were largely reduced by him, while its business was greatly improved.—What credit do my colleague and his friends give him for it? They have poured on him from beginning to end, a torrent of unceasing abuse. As every new exposure of a defaulter or a rogue through his instrumentality, their abuse has been doubled, clearly showing that an honest and fearless public officer is their highest antipathy.

While complaining that the party in power have not made the promised reforms, my colleague gives incontestible evidence of his sincerity by sneering at those which were made. He never finds grounds of attack upon Mr. Kendall for sending to the post-office, to be charged with postage, the letters and pamphlets fraudulently enclosed to the Fourth auditor to evade the post office laws, and for discontinuing sundry newspaperd, because he could derive no assistance from them in settling the accounts of the U. S. Navy. Yes, sir, in the reforms actually made by Mr. Kendall, as well as in those not made, the bank attorneys, immaculate and consistent men! find ground of attack!!

When Kendall went into the Fourth Auditor's office, the legal postage on private letters received under cover to the Fourth Auditor, was about a dollar a day, at the rate of 86¼ cts. each; on the supposition that as great a number had gone out under his predecessor's frank, the fraud on the post office revenue, through that single office under the Clay-Adams administration, was over $700 a year! Mr. Kendall put an entire stop to this abuse, and what thanks does he get from the Bank stipendiaries? They hate and abuse him the worse for it. But, says my colleague, he franked some prospectuses of the Globe. Well, if he chose to send them to his friends, had he not a lawful right to do so? Did he violate any law, or do so much of it as to constitute an abuse? That is not pretended, nor can it be with truth. But because he put a stop to violations of the law, and then exercised his privilege in conformity with law, the bank attorneys find an inconsistency in it? I can tell my colleague, upon undoubted authority, that Mr. Kendall's course in that respect is not changed; that he uniformly sends to the post office letters for others enclosed to him, to be charged with postage, and sometimes pays it himself; that he corresponds on letters with his frank, not strictly his own, no, not even those of his wife and children. What prince does he get from the Bank attorneys for this scrupulous obedience to the law? The highest praise—their unceasing abuse.

My colleague finds a vast inconsistency in Mr. Kendall's discontinuing newspapers as Fourth Auditor, because they gave him no assistance "in settling the accounts of the United States Navy," and paying for a number of them as Postmaster General! In this effort to reduce economy to what it is, I see no inconsistency. The papers were not of use to him in performing his public duty as Fourth Auditor, and therefore he did not take them; they are of use to him in performing his duty as post master General, and therefore he does not discontinue them. Is there any inconsistency in this? None but a bank attorney can make it out.—While Mr. Kendall was Fourth Auditor, he paid all his newspaper subscriptions out of his own pocket because they were exclusively for his private use; but, as Postmaster General, it is essential that he should have not only the general but the local intelligence from every quarter of the country, and the only wonder is that he pays so little for it.

It is natural, sir, for the bank attorneys to find fault with the part acted by Mr. Kendall in the removal of the deposits. Their client was discovered by that measure and the sources of many a good fee dried up. But here again, Mr. Kendall is followed by misrepresentation. "He got ten dollars a day," it is said, "for doing this injury to the public"—meaning the Bank. Now, sir, I pronounce this statement entirely without foundation. Mr. Kendall, under an appointment from the Secretary of the Treasury, visited the cities of Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, to negotiate with the banks, and spent some days in each city. He had necessarily to see much company at the hotels where he stopped, and those who have had occasion to take private parlors, and have private tables, at the public houses in those cities, where they necessarily act and treat civilly, many gentlemen calling on them know that the actual expenses, including travelling, can scarcely average less that $10 a day. Mr. Kendall paid all these expenses out of his own pocket, and received from the Treasury barely enough to make himself whole. This is the whole of this nefarious affair, and the sum received, $216,11. How rich this man must have made himself.

My colleague follows Mr. Kendall into the Post office department, and makes another mistake at the first jump. "The printed list of clerks in his Department," says he, "exhibits his father-in-law and two nephews, with salaries of $1,000, 1,200, and 1,400," &c. Mr. Kendall has not, and never had, two nephews among the clerks of his Department. But what if he had two, nephews in his Department? Have they not as good a right to be employed as any body else, if they are competent and efficient in the duties assigned them? If there be places of peculiar trust, is it wrong that the head of a Department should fill them with men whose integrity he best knows, although they may be his nephews or his brother?

When abuses and frauds, instead of the most honest and honorable discharge of their public duties, are perpetrated by his relations, it will be time enough to consure their appointment.

Nothing will satisfy these Bank attorneys. Major Barry is abused for not keeping everything right in the Post Office Department, and Mr. Kendall is abused for putting everything right. The committees of Congress, majority and minority, complained of Maj. Barry for making extravagant allowances to Stockton and Stokes, and now Mr. Kendall is abused for not being willing to pay them allowances a thousand times more extravagant. One of my worthy colleagues (Mr. Whittlesey) I believe wrote some twenty five pages in a book, 30,000 copies of which were printed by order of the House, to prove that Maj. Barry had allowed those contractors some 100,000 more than they were entitled to by law, and he voted for an act under color of which they have been allowed 160,000 more under the same pretences, and has stood quietly by and seen Mr. Kendall compelled to pay it by judicial usurpation, if not something worse. I should like to ask my honorable colleague Mr. Whittlesey a question or two. Did he not thoroughly understand this case having investigated and written a long report about it? When the bill for the relief of Stockton and Stokes was before the House did he not offer a long string of provisoes, which were adopted? Were not the provisoes so carefully framed as not to touch one of the claims in controversy, and be, in fact perfectly negatory! If so, what was the object! If he did not think Stockton and Stokes entitled to as much as they got of Major Barry by 100,0.0, why did he vote for a bill to give them more! And when he found that an enormous sum more was awarded them, why did he not propose to repeal the act, instead of standing by and saying Mr. K. compelled to pay it?

The case will illustrate the sincerity and honesty of the Bank attorneys. For political effect, they abused Maj. Barry for making allowances, then voted for a bill authorizing allowances much more extravagant: and because Mr. Kendall refused to pay still further allowances, which he did not believe authorized even by that act, they abuse him for withholding from Stockton and Stokes their just dues! All this shows that they care not a fig what use is made of the public money, and that their object in finding fault is, to impair the confidence of the people in the Administration. Only two $100,000 awards on Stockton and Stokes with indifference, if not with joy, and complain that three hundred and sixteen dollars was allowed Mr. Kendall, to pay his expenses when upon public service.

Sir, I have taken some pains to ascertain on what principles the Post Office Department is administered by this much abused man. I understand that he went into it with a declaration that as a corollary to the experiment of administering it in strict conformity to moral principles, and the principles of economy, and if convinced of its impracticability, would hold it no longer. It was the fashion for officers and clerks in the Department to receive presents from contractors; and, when travelling to ride free in their coaches. Believing that to be one of the most pernicious bank modes of corruption, he forbade the reception of all or any such favors from contractors under penalty of dismission, and prescribed the same rules for himself. All presents from contractors he has declined; and on every occasion has refused to travel free in their stages, steamboats, and cars. Free tickets have been sent him from some of the great lines, which he has uniformly returned.

As before remarked, this man does not cover with his frank even the letters of his wife and children, but pays the postage out of his own pocket; nor does he take stationary from the department for his own use, much less for that of his family, believing that the public stationary is not his property, and that he has no right to use it but for public purposes.—Of this, I have the most conclusive testimony, not coming from himself. When I was informed of this fact, although I was bound to believe it myself, I did not know that others would believe that Mr. Kendall's honesty was so scrupulous. I therefore addressed the following note to his stationer, of which this is a copy, and received the annexed answer:

Washington City, July 1, 1838.

Dear Sir—Will you be so good as to inform me where the Hon. A. Kendall, postmaster general, procures stationery for the Post Office Department? If you can, will you have the kindness to inform me from whom he procures his stationary for his private purposes and for the use of his family? If you can, will you inform me whether both are paid out of the public contingent fund, or in the latter paid for out of his private means? These inquiries are not made from any sinister motives, but from their nature I presume are unfavorable prejudice to Mr. Kendall or any other person.

Your early attention to this request will much oblige your friend, A. DUNCAN.

John T. Sullivan, Esq.

Washington City, July 1, 1838.

Dear Sir—In reply to your note of this morning, I supply stationary for the Post Office Department, which is charged to the department, and paid for out of the public contingent fund. These articles are procured by the messenger and are entered in a pass book kept by him for that purpose. I furnish stationery for Mr. Kendall's private use. These have been ordered by his private family, sent to his residence, and charged in every instance, to his individual account. Your obt. servt.

Hon. A. Duncan. JOHN T. SULLIVAN.

I know that most men think Mr. Kendall over scrupulous, and too precise on these points; but to all such suggestions he replies, that it is impossible for a man to err on that side, and that he will go out of office as conscious of rectitude as he came in.

And has this man done nothing for the public that he should thus be pursued with never ending abuse? Has he not been efficient and faithful in every public trust? Could the duties of Fourth Auditor be better discharged than they were by him? Did he not bring the Post Office Department out of Deep embarrassment as by magic? Has he not almost doubled its business and usefulness? Has he not with great skill, sustained its credit under circumstances which shook that of all the banks in the country, and of most business men? In fine could that Department be managed with more efficiency or better success?

Sir, it is for his virtues, his talents, and his success, that the bank pendiaries hate him. They know he will not corrupt, and cannot be corrupted. He was efficient in putting down the bank of the United States; and he desires to see the Government independent of institutions which, experience proves, have not discretion enough to manage their own affairs, and, of course, not enough to be trusted with the use or custody of the public money. These are his real offences. It is feared that his integrity, his efficiency, and his success will give weight to his opinions and his judgement; and every pretext is seized on to assail him. He has a few newspapers to support; a newspaper to a few friends; he has expressed his opinions in certain letters and toasts; he takes a few newspapers to see what complaints there are of the mails, and what suggestions of improvement; and he received $816 for negotiating with the State Banks! Are these his only crimes? No, sir. It is made an offence in him to have said what he could sustain the credit of his department without the help of Congress! The Treasury Department is abused because it wanted no help, and the Post Office because it did not as it is put out of the power of Mr. Kendall to sustain the credit of his Department, we have been throwing extra allowances upon him, and endeavoring to force upon him in the present depressed condition of the revenue, near 500 new mail routs to be put in operation. And I have seen men exult here, under the impression that they would thus embarrass him, that they had got him up a tree at last. It has even been said that he was already embarrassed; but this is far from the truth. But how much credulous do not believe it. The "wish is father to the thought." The committee on the post office expenditures, contains a majority of Opposition men. If they find the Department embarrassed, why do they not show the fact? Do you, think sir, the matter would not be examined into, and reported if there was the slightest faith in the assertion? If it were so, we should soon know it, and the exhibition of certain patriotic gentlemen on this floor, would know no bounds. Let the most scrupulous scrutiny is invited, and malignant aspersion defied. Instead of having treed their game, gentlemen will find themselves still "barking up the wrong tree."

I cannot help giving some very conclusive evidences of the sincerity of the bank attorneys, in their attack upon the administration in sundry matters.

Mr. Kendall is abused for having received three hundred and sixteen dollars to refund his expenses after performing a journey on public business. Now let us see what the bank men did while in power.

Mr. Southard was Secretary of the Navy in 1826, 7, 8. He is now, I understand, one of the pillars of the party; a man whom they especially delight to honor. He had cashier Swartwout's flay; he was positively forbidden by law to advance the public money to any navy agent, or any officer of the Navy, and yet he advanced, as a naval servant, to Samuel Swartwout, though thus positively forbidden, Mr. Southard advanced to his chief clerk, $600 of the public money, in November 1826, and sent him to New Orleans to look after the accounts of a former Navy agent. He did nothing there whatsoever, but get $100 more from the Navy agent; and without any bills rendered, Mr. Southard allowed him $800 for his expenses, when he was allowing only $200 to the officers of the navy for the same journey. Would you believe it, sir, after hearing my colleague's speech? This man was receiving his $2,000 salary as chief clerk during the whole period of his absence. In what case has any member of the present Administration so grossly and flagrantly violated the law?

This Mr. Southard, as Secretary of the Navy was also Commissioner of the Navy Pension fund which was vested in stocks. On the 1st of July 1828, these stocks were paid off to the amount of $281,384 72, and on the 1st of January 1829, to the amount of $43,980 17 more. These were not reinvested until February 17th. 1829, by which means more than $9,000 of interest was lost. Who was using the money in the mean time, is what I do not know. Mr. Hay having written a letter or two on the subject, and perhaps conferred with the cashier of the branch bank in this city, made out an account, charging half per cent commission for reinvesting those stocks, and $150,000 would have been reinvested in 1825. Hay was still Southard's chief clerk, at a salary of 2,000 per year, he was cut off by law from receiving any extra compensation, the services rendered was properly a part of his regular duty, and did not probably occupy him two hours; and yet Mr. Southard allowed him this monstrous charge of 3,376 32, and he pocketed the money. Thus was this charity fund for the support of the crippled officers and seamen, and their families plundered of yea: sir, plundered, by loss of interest through neglect, and cash actually paid Hay, in violation of law, of about $13,000; and yet the men who want to restore the dynasty who did this, mouth at us about corruption and abuses which now exist only in their own corrupt hearts. Has any thing like this been done by the present Administration? No, sir, it has put an end to the allowance of commissions in all such cases.

Let us look a little further at the pure dynasty whom the reign of banks is to restore.

Upon Southard's recommendation Mr. Adams, in 1826, I believe, appointed one Andrew Armstrong, navy agent at Lima in Peru. This is believed to be the only instance on record, in which a foreign navy agent was nominated to the Senate, that class of officers having been considered special agents, not expressly provided for in the law. Southard then advanced to Armstrong $28,000 out of the Treasury. What this was for nobody ever found the secret could divine for a change at Lima is easy to say to one of the United States, and it seemed ridiculous to send money to a country where money grows. But a reason has been discovered. No sooner was the money got than 2,000 of it was lent to Southard's chief clerk for two years, without interest and was never repaid by him! Whether this was the true reason for a departure from all usage in this proceeding, I know not. Whether Armstrong thus bought his appointment I know not. All I know is that it is suspected, and every one must draw his own inferences.

What an outcry is kept up, Mr. Chairman, by the Bank advocates, upon the false allegation that the Administration is seeking, by the independent Treasury plan, to get the public money into their possession for sinister purposes? Those who are struggling to get the public money for private uses are clamoring against those w o wish it kept by sworn and bonded officers, subject to heavy penalties, for public purposes only! Let us see what was the practice of these men when in power?

When Mr. Southard was Secretary of the Navy, he converted the public cannon and shot into money to the amount of $25,000, and had it placed to his own credit in the branch bank in this city! But, sir, I will give you particulars. Gen. Mason, who has a foundry near here, was applied to by some S. American authorities for a quantity of cannon; but he had none. So, to enable him to make a good speculation, Mr. Southard lent him the public cannon and shot, and, as security for their return, required him to deposite $25,000 as already stated. It was, I believe, about 18 months before Gen. Mason replaced the cannon, and in the mean time the money remained at Mr. Southard's credit, and if he did not use it, the bank did, by discounting on it.

Now what law was there for such a transaction? What law authorized Mr. Southard to lend the public property, and receive money into his own pocket (for that is the amount of it), as security for its restoration? It is in point of the violation of all law and all propriety. Did the bank advocates ever whisper a word of censure against this illegal conduct of one of their great champions? Not a hint, sir. All is right, because a bank man did it. The public property may be lent out and used by banks and their peculiar friends with perfect impunity? and to put a stop to it is "hunting and a crime!" But have the gentlemen found out any thing in which any member of the present administration has put $25,000 of the public property into his pocket for a twelvemonth? No, sir, nothing like it. If they could, we should begin to hear, and justly too, of impeachment by this House. And yet, sir, guilty of such an outrageous act as to be impeachable!

The corruptions and abuses of the Clay administration were manifold and glaring.

Hints to Young People.—No. 6.

Choice of Occupation.—When a youth has reached the period at which he is to choose his occupation for life, he has reached an important crisis. Almost every person has, at some particular time, an opportunity of making a free selection of the principal business to which he will devote his time and strength, and by which he will seek his fortune in the world. There are some exceptions—two classes; first those, who by a species of inheritance, seem destined, without reference to their choice, to follow the occupation of their fathers. Second, those whose independence for any regular employment leaves them floating through life as it were, on the tide of chance, ready to engage in every employment that offers, and but poorly qualified for any.

Let every young person, at the proper time, fix his choice on such an occupation for life, as he considers best adapted to his circumstances, genius and taste, and then regard his life as devoted, extraordinary events excepted, to that pursuit. And to guide the choice of any who may be deliberating on the subject, I would submit the following hints:

1. Never take it for granted that the happiness, or prosperity, or respectability of a man, depends entirely on his occupation. Some seem to choose their occupations as though they thought their business alone was to make them honorable. They seem ambitious to exalt into those kinds of business which admit of most display. They have associated great facilities for the gratification of pride and vanity with certain employments, and seem unwilling to contest them in any other. But there have been men of great excellence and usefulness in almost every kind of business. Among the mechanical, the mercantile, and the professional occupations, employment is made respectable, by the men who practice it, not the men by the employment. Yet many a youth looks with aversion on some of the most lucrative and useful occupations, as though they were low and disgraceful. "What trade, my son, said a mother. "do you wish to learn?" "Why mother," replied the youth, "I want to learn the governor's trade." The simpleton expressed the natural prevalence of youthful ambition. The language is indeed, in most cases, ridiculous; but the spirit is in all cases, equally inconsistent and foolish. Some young men want to be merchants some wish to practice the learned professions with more reference to the show and pride of life, than to their qualifications. A person who might be respectable in one employment, is contemptible in another from want of capacity to conduct it with success. It is dangerous for a youth, to be captivated by the gaudy appendages of some showy occupation, rather than prefer a solid and productive pursuit.

There is nothing in manual operation which can render one employment more honorable than another. In this respect all occupations stand on a common level. The understanding and the morals are the test of merit. One farmer is often as much above another farmer, in respect to the honor of his occupation, and one mechanic as much above another mechanic, as the merchant or the lawyer is above either. There, is indeed, more of the gratification of taste, connected with some employments than others, and more genius and taste given them others to carry them on; and such are rendered more dignified and honorable by the character of the minds that pursue them. But the honor belongs to the man, not to the profession. Any useful occupation is made honorable by being followed by honorable men. That employment will always be honored which is practiced on honorable principles, and for honorable ends.

CHARLES CRAYON.

Sammy and the Captain.—We are told in the Louisville Journal that not long since one of their splendid up country boats was making her way gallantly down the majestic Mississippi when the captain discovered a man on shore, waving his handkerchief, as is usual when a person desires to take passage.

The captain immediately rounded to, and our cockney sung out;

"What have you to sell, capting?"

"Nothing," replied the captain.

"Haven't you no whiskey," asked the sucker.

"No But what the—'s that to you?" was the rejoinder.

"Why, I was think'n I'd buy a pint, if you'd just wait till I went home for a gourd, and you'd take your pay out in wood?" says Sawney, and with that he struck a dog trot, laughing in his sleeve no doubt, at his own smartness, and at the wrath of the captain.

Bees Ideas.—I know," said a bright boy, "what makes butter so high. The bees have grown so tall in Shunesbury, that the boys can't find their cows.—Hampshire Gaz.

The Bitter Bit.—"I say neighbor Snobbs, if you dont keep your hens out of my garden I will shoot them."

"Very well, Doolittle, shoot away; only, if you kill any of my hens throw them over into my yard."

Crack went the old fowling piece, morning after morning, and the large fat hens were pitched into neighbor Snobb's, yard like rain. After a fortnight or more Doolittle discovered that Snobbs never had any hens, and that he had been shooting his own, they having broken out of his own hen-coop.—N. O. Pic.

Anecdote.—A worthy old clergyman of our acquaintance, one of the old school, of which few relics now remain, used to relate the following very much given. There was in his parish one C., by trade a carpenter, who had acquired much credit for ingenuity, and no less for strawberries and fish. C. was one day hewing timber, when the clergyman accosted him: Mr. C. you have become quite famous for your ingenuity; you have made almost every thing else, pray can you make me a decent every sathy, Mr. P., replied the other, looking the parson carefully, and raising his axe; "just put your head on that stick—you want the best sathy of any man I know of."

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

Cholera in Nova Scotia.—We learn from the Halifax Journal of the 27th ult. that the cholera had appeared in that city, and had been a regular visitor for several years. He formerly selected the poor, the dissolute, the intemperate, and such like persons, and now follows his Bible again, and chooses to bear the gospel ground.

How was this reformation effected? Some months ago his wife was confined at the North Battery in labor, and at the time of the birth of her child, was very dangerously ill, that every day seemed their last. But in all this lively distress, made more insufferable by the poverty he had brought upon them, the unnatural husband and father was drunk, swearing about the house, and left his afflicted companion to bear her burdens alone. One day in complete despair, she addressed him thus; "For several years you have wasted by intemperance all we both have earned, and now in this afflicting sickness and distress you can afford me no assistance; it is more than I can endure. As soon as I am able I will take the children and go home to my friends, and I leave you to take care of yourself."

Here the eldest son a fine boy, replied, "Yes, father and I will go too and help mother, for the other day when you were drunk and swore so up the street a boy asked me if you was my father and I told him NO, that you were an old man that boarded at our house." Just at this date the father was taken sick, and for several weeks his wife nursed him most faithfully and affectionately. At length the health restored, but he resorted not to his cups, and is now an affectionate and industrious husband and father.

Reflections.

1. Intemperance promotes infidelity; temperance truth.

2. If we will reform drunkards, we must deal faithfully and kindly with them.

3. When mankind ardent spirits, their friends are exceedingly ashamed of them.—Cin. Jour.

Wise men seek the approbation of God; secondarily, that of their own consciences; and thirdly that of their fellow men. Fools reverse this order.

Lost wealth may be regained by a course of industry;—forgotten knowledge restored by study;—alienated friendship soothed into forgiveness;—even forfeited reputation won back by penitence and virtue. But who ever again looked upon its vanished hours?

To find one who has passed through life without sorrow, you must find one incapable of love or hatred, of hope or fear—one who has no memory of the past no sympathy with humanity, and no feeling in common with the rest of the species

Discretion as American Society.—The men of the poor die rich—while the sons of the rich die poor—what an encouragement to put through life in acquiring wealth to run our children. But let the good with our money as we go along. Educate our sons—secure their virtue by habits of industry and study, and then let them take care of themselves.—Franklin.

"Perfect Nothing."—The celebrated Talleyrand is said to have been remarkable early for the absence of mind so characteristic in his old age. He learned to it throughout the whole course of his long and eventful public career. And surely no man whose name history has given, has more fully and strikingly thus himself verified the remark of another of his distinguished countrymen, —"that there is no nuisance which a clever man may not turn to his own advantage." Talleyrand always kept his eyes open, turned every thing to the best account, and contrived with singular sagacity and address to make every body with him serve, and every event however unnatural, contribute to his advancement.

And we cannot help thinking that the possession or want of a habit of accurate observation—a fixed purpose—TO OVERLOOK NOTHING, possessed vastly affected to, accounting not a few of the great differences which we notice between far forest individuals. Some men e en to go through the world with their eyes shut—and never keep them always open. The latter, at every step, are adding to their stock of knowledge, and correcting and improving their judgment by every passing observation. They keep their minds ever awake, and active, and on the alert,—gathering instruction from every occurrence watching for favorable opportunities, and seeking if possible to turn even their failures and mistakes to their advantage. Such persons will rarely have occasion to say, "I have lost a day."

Destroying Weeds.—It is of great importance that the garden at all times be kept perfectly free from weeds. It requires far less labor to destroy weeds while they are yet small; a prevents a great waste of soil, for as much nutriment is required for the growth of a crop of weeds as a crop of the most valuable and delicious vegetable and both cannot flourish on the same piece of ground. Drought is greatly increased by the growth of weeds, for nearly all plants are constantly throwing off from their stems and leaves a large quantity of moisture; and some plants have been found to send off more than twice their own weight in a single day. A bunch of grass under a glass vessel, in two minutes covered the sides of the vessel by the exhaled moisture, that ran down in large drops, and that an acre of grass, by a similar estimate, threw off thirty hogsheads of water in a day. Hence the reason why in dry weather the soil is found so much dryer at the roots of weeds than on unoccupied ground. Hence also the absurdity of the opinion that weeds prevent the ground from becoming dry by shading it.

Making Butter.—Putting a pint of cold water, during the summer months, in each pail of milk before strained from the cow, will materially aid in this desirable object. The reason why butter becomes rancid so soon, is owing to the imperfect manner in which the milk, first newly soured before churning, is separated from the butter.—Retarding the souring of the milk, by the application of cold water, obviates the difficulty.

Tuesday an "honest penny."—The Trustees of St. Paul's Church in the city of New York (belonging to a corporation worth a dozen millions of dollars) let out the privilege of their side walks for the ensuing year, and have a regular list of every person who has been a regular for many years. He formerly subsisted by the charity of the church, but as he has now become an infidel, the last six months he has been supporting himself and family, and now believes his Bible again, and chooses to bear the gospel ground.

The following is taken from the New York Spectator. It will be useful table in preserving as reference during the Coming Elections.

The following reference table for the ensuing elections may be of service; it is I believe, in all respects correct.

The Congressional Terms of the following Senators will expire on the 4th of March 1836; Benjamin Smith, of Vermont, whig; Daniel Webster of Massachusetts, do; Asher Robbins, of Rhode Island, do; S. L. Southard, of New Jersey, do; Samuel McKean, of Pennsylvania, do; ——— Richard M. Bayard of Delaware, do; ——— Hendrick of Maryland, do; John M. Niles, of Connecticut, Democrat; ——— Trotter, of Mississippi, do; Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, do; Thomas Morris, of Ohio, do; John Tipton, of Indiana, do; and Thomas Hart Benton of Missouri, do; N. P. Tallmadge, of New York, conservative; and Wm. C. Rives of Virginia, do.

In the following states Representatives are to be elected; Missouri elects 2 on the 1st Monday in August; Illinois 3 on the same day; Vermont 5, on the 1st Tuesday in September; Maine 8 on the second Monday of the same month; Georgia nine, on the first Monday in October; Arkansas one, on the same day; South Carolina 9 on the second Monday in October; New Jersey six, on the second Tuesday in October; Ohio 19 on the same day; New York forty, on the first Monday in November; Massachusetts twelve, on the second Monday in November; and Delaware one, on the second Tuesday, in the same month.

In the States of Missouri and Illinois the Democratic party, in the election of 1834 carried the whole ticket. In Vermont the whigs elected four and the Democrats one. In Maine, the democrats six and the whigs two. In Georgia, the democrats eight and the whigs one. In Arkansas one, democratic one. In South Carolina, the whigs seven, democrats two. In New Jersey the democrats have a whole delegation, as a general ticket. In Pennsylvania, the Democrats elected seventeen members, and the whigs eleven. In Ohio, the whigs eleven and the democrats eight. In New York the democrats thirty and the whigs ten. A cast iron bridge is to be erected across Jones Falls upon the line of Baltimore street, (Baltimore) as a support to the present dilapidated stone structure. Its total width will be 51 feet, which frame work of the bridge, including the beams supporting the floor, is of cast and wrought iron. The floor itself is also of wood, to be prepared by Kayne's well tested process for the preservation of timber from decay. It will cost six or 7000 dollars less than a stone bridge.

SALE OF THE U. S. BANK BONDS.

I hasten to communicate to you the particulars of an important money transaction that has this day transpired in our city. The Bank of the United States, has through the medium of Mr. McAllister, his broker, taken all the bonds which that institution had given to the Government, and which were advertised for sale. Of course, she takes them at par—less the interest,) but she pays these at different points of the Union agreed on by the negotiating parties." These can be no doubt, that the Government has made her self a better bargain out of the bank, than it would have made, all things considered, out of any individual or Company at home or abroad.—It is certainly not less advantageous that the bank in making to herself these bonds, makes at least a regular interest on the investment and has the immense advantage resulting from the right to pay the amount in certain parts of the Union, where your costly plate funds is a manifest advantage to debt.

The following reference table for the ensuing elections may be of service; it is I believe, in all respects correct.

The Congressional Terms of the following Senators will expire on the 4th of March 1836; Benjamin Smith, of Vermont, whig; Daniel Webster of Massachusetts, do; Asher Robbins, of Rhode Island, do; S. L. Southard, of New Jersey, do; Samuel McKean, of Pennsylvania, do; ——— Richard M. Bayard of Delaware, do; ——— Hendrick of Maryland, do; John M. Niles, of Connecticut, Democrat; ——— Trotter, of Mississippi, do; Felix Grundy, of Tennessee, do; Thomas Morris, of Ohio, do; John Tipton, of Indiana, do; and Thomas Hart Benton of Missouri, do; N. P. Tallmadge, of New York, conservative; and Wm. C. Rives of Virginia, do.

In the following states Representatives are to be elected; Missouri elects 2 on the 1st Monday in August; Illinois 3 on the same day; Vermont 5, on the 1st Tuesday in September; Maine 8 on the second Monday of the same month; Georgia nine, on the first Monday in October; Arkansas one, on the same day; South Carolina 9 on the second Monday in October; New Jersey six, on the second Tuesday in October; Ohio 19 on the same day; New York forty, on the first Monday in November; Massachusetts twelve, on the second Monday in November; and Delaware one, on the second Tuesday, in the same month.

In the States of Missouri and Illinois the Democratic party, in the election of 1834 carried the whole ticket. In Vermont the whigs elected four and the Democrats one. In Maine, the democrats six and the whigs two. In Georgia, the democrats eight and the whigs one. In Arkansas one, democratic one. In South Carolina, the whigs seven, democrats two. In New Jersey the democrats have a whole delegation, as a general ticket. In Pennsylvania, the Democrats elected seventeen members, and the whigs eleven. In Ohio, the whigs eleven and the democrats eight. In New York the democrats thirty and the whigs ten. Exchange.—Mr. Hobson;—I have noticed remarks made in some papers that we should endeavor to get rid of banks, and deal entirely in specie as much as possible. I will venture to say that not one of your readers can get a mouthful of any thing with half the decency that a toad can,—only give him a chance.

Now if any one wish to see the thing done to the life let him go before a toad any kind of a worm or bug that will stir, and if he does not go into "Davy Jone's Locker," in the way of a caution, then I am no judge.

Give them a good shelter and not abuse them, and you can keep them in one place for years. There is one now in sight that has made his place of residence some 5 or 6 years under the steps of my door; and he looks as fat and cheerful as any of Uncle Sam's office holders.

As I had much rather see one toad in a garden than two dogs in the front door way, I would recommend to every farmer, who can find time to look up a few of them and put in his garden, and on his corn ground.

And do you ask where they are most likely to be found? Look into your old potatoe holes, and there you will find them imprisoned, if not relieved by some kind hand, perhaps for life, not for debt or opinion's sake, but probably for a misjump before settling their accounts. But a few days ago I released more than fifty in a very short time, and conveyed them to my corn ground, and I find that it was not only doing as I would be done by under like circumstances, but I have the satisfaction of doing a deed of humanity.

New Banks.—It is now settled that there will be at least four new Banks established in our city under the General Banking law, viz: "The North American Trust and Banking Company." Already organized to 20 Will st. with Joseph Lewis as President, Myndert Van Schaick as Vice President, Walter Jones Cashier, and Daniel E. Tylee assistant Cashier. This Bank is intended to bear an important part in regulating the exchanges of the country, with a capital of probably of Fifty millions. The second is "The American Exchange Bank," more recently formed, which duties a large portion of the well known business men and capitalists of our city, and is intended to be more strictly a mercantile institution. It is to be organized on a somewhat novel plan, having a limit of sixty customers and no more, each of whom becomes a Director, upon their deposit of a fixed duties and privileges. The subscription is expected to have when only a capital of Fifty millions, but will commence with such sum as may be subscribed at the opening of the books on the 4th of September. Next we have a branch of the Pennsylvania monster, with the well known Cashier of the old Branch, Morris Robinson, Esq. as President and Samuel Pleasonton of the Bodies branch as Cashier. This will have a capital of but ten or fifteen millions, but will probably go into operation before either of the others. Last and least, but not less to be esteemed we have "The Mechanics' Association," already organized, with Sheppard Knapp, Esq. as President. All these, it is hoped will be in operation in season to afford material assistance to the fall trade. There is firm hand ahead.—New Yorker.

Mr. William Leggett, of our city, Ex-Editor of the Evening post, Plaindealer, &c., has been called to sail at the police Court for an assault and battery on Mr. David Hale Editor of the Journal of Commerce. The provocation consisted in an editorial on Mr. Leggett's presumed authorship of Forrest's Fourth of July-Oration; the assault consisted of striking Mr. Hale and spitting in his face.—Ib.

Five dollar counterfeit bills on the Morris Canal Bank are in circulation, dated Jan. 7, 1831, and signed by Robt. Gilchrist, Cashier, and Louis Mc Lane, President: A. B. & C. Durand, engravers.

A Good Beginning.—The Missouri Republican states it as a fact highly honorable to the parties, and worthy of general imitation—in which we fully agree—that a portion of the opposing candidates for office in Illinois have given a pledge not treat or permit their friends to treat in the electioneering canvass or the election.

Union College.—At the late annual commencement of this institution, the degree of A. B. was conferred on 92 young men, and the degree of A. M. on 38 alumni. The honorary degree of D. An improved pair of scissors for cutting iron, has been invented by Mr. Pope, of Sandwich Mass. It will cut off a bar of iron six inches in width, and three eighths of an inch in thickness with as much ease as a piece of sheet iron can be cut with the scissors generally in use.

There were two Fires in town during the last night; and both there is reason to believe, were kindled by incendiarism. The Fire Department were not summoned to either, as both burned down at the corner of Market and Mulberry street, belonging to Judge Crane and Mr. Johnson, with 3 tons of hay owned by Thos. V. Johnson. The buildings were insured for $2,000 which quite covers its value. The fire was severely extinguished when the companies were called to the scenery in the extreme North of the city, [on Mill Brook] occupied by J. N. Jordan son for the manufacture of coach springs, steps, axels and machinery. Owing to the distance from the other fire the firemen could not reach it in time to save either the building or its contents.

The Factory itself, with its gearing, belonged to A. W. Kinney, was valued at from 4 to 5000 dollars, and was insured in the Mechanics Insurance Co. for $2,500. The other machinery, with the tools, and stock, belonged to Mr. Jordanson, whose loss is about 7,000 dollars. His insurance is 2000, one half in the Spring Garden Phil., Co., and the other in the New Brunswick Co. Mr. J. employed 40 men who are of course now deprived of employment.

Other apartments of his building were occupied by H. D. Hudson Mustard factory, and by Mr. Dean, as mill right, who had just moved in with his valuable tools, and both lose the whole of their stock.

We understood there has been no fire about the factory within six weeks, and no doubt exists as to the origin of the conflagration. The miserable incendiary has the satisfaction to know that he has been the instrument of throwing upwards of 60 men out of employment, and thus depriving many a family of the means of their daily bread.

About 60 houses were burnt in New York yesterday. The fire broke out about day break in the sugar factory of Bauminster & Sonnaplin, and extended to the rear of 100 Hammond Street, and before the progress of the conflagration could be checked the major part of the block bounded by Hammond, Washington, Perry and West streets was consumed.

Many poor families are thus turned out of doors with what they had upon their backs. Small, but part of it was burned to death, in the bed, being an old man. At least 100 families are burned.

Since it was resolved by the late bank Convention that a general resumption of specie payments should take place on the 15th or the 20th of the month, a large number of merchants from Virginia and other Southern States have come their appearance in our market, who had not been in the way on business before since the suspension of 1837, in consequence of the depreciation of southern exchanges. They are buying pretty freely of goods, and that in a fair proportion of a large fall business, as the South West are generally very bare of goods, and may be expected to be in as flourishing a state as they were two years ago.—Gazette.

Business.—The inhabitants of a vigorous and extended fall trade, the commercial community were very seriously within the last ten days. Some of our importers of dry goods who have been reaping for the last twelve months, have now as many customers as it is possible to attend upon. Equal months credits are generally given; but some shrewd men who are making their fortunes by buying and selling for cash, will be likely in the end to work a change in respect to credit.—Jour. of Com.

☞ A most severe hail storm laid waste nearly all the vegetation of part of Chester County Pa. on Wednesday afternoon last. Hail stones 2 and 3 inches in circumference covered the ground about Bradford 6 inches deep. One farmer had 40 acres of wheat which was just ready for the sickle, entirely prostrated, and he turned his hogs in next day to reap it. Orchards were stripped of leaves and fruit—windows broken and cattle bruised, in every direction within the track of the storm which was three miles in width. Many poor people have been cast down to bread want.

☞ This day the 1st of August will be signalized in the British West India Islands, as the anniversary of the Abolition of Slavery in those Colonies. The emancipation of 800,000 Slave beings, with the free consent of all concerned, and under favorable auspices, is certainly an event for congratulation and rejoicing.

Late Appointment by the President and Senate. Thomas Jefferson Smith, to be Consul of the U. S. for the port of Cette, in France.

We notice the appointment of this young gentleman with peculiar pleasure. He is the beloved son of an old and most excellent friend Reverend Smith, formerly of this State, now no more Mr. Smith as many will remember who reads this paragraph, was for a long time Post master in this City. In 1819, we believe, he was elected one of our Representatives in Congress. In 1831 he received the appointment of Receiver of the Land Office at Little Rock Arkansas, to which place he and his family immediately removed and where he died some two or three years after.

Thomas Jefferson Smith was a child at the time of his father's removal, and we have not seen him since: but we have from time to time been appri d of the growing esteem and respect in which he was held by those around him, and have rejoiced to know that he inherited largely of his fathers virtues—truth, sincerity and uprightness.—*N. Arrival of Arabs.—Ali and a number of other Bedouin Arabs, that were a short time since performing at the Parisian theatres, arrived at New York, last evening in the Sirius from London, and will make their appearance here a few days at the Park, as we learn by the Gazette.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, August 7, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

We were presented this week by Mr. Silas Cole, of Scotch Plains, with three apples, of the growth of 1836, consequently they now are two years old. They were in a good state of preservation, and were kept thus long by being packed in fine cut straw, and enclosed air tight. He also gave us some fine apples of this season.

Democratic Essex County Convention.—The Democrats of this county will meet at William Ball's, Camptown, on Saturday, 18th of August, inst. at 2 P. M., to appoint delegates to attend the State convention at Trenton, and other necessary business.

Serious.—The Boston Post states, on the authority of a gentleman from Washington, that Mr Maurey, of Tennessee, who was so severely assailed by Campbell of the same state, at the last of the session of Congress, is so much injured, that his recovery is considered extremely doubtful. It wanted but this one member of congress beating another to death with his fists—to put the climax to the deep damnation of Cilley's murder; and render the disgrace of the American Legislature before the civilized world no longer a matter of doubt.—Public Ledger.

Important from Brazil.—Letters from Rio Janeiro to the 1st of June, with the sight of which we have been favored, mention the receipts of advices from Rio Grande to May 22d, confirming the total defeat of the Government troops by the insurgents of that province, with a loss of 2000 men. Only a few cavalry and a few generals escaped. The rebels were marching towards Rio Grande, and there was no hope of the Government being able to withstand them.

The province Rio Grande was considered as lost to Brazil. It is the southernmost province of Brazil, and borders on the Oriental Republic of which Monte Video is the capital. Journal of Commerce.

Drought.—The Pittsburg Manufacturer of Saturday says "Navigation on our rivers is entirely suspended."

There was a soaking rain in Baltimore and as far west in Maryland as Frederick on Tuesday night.

The Hon. Anson Jones, Minister Plenipotentiary from Texas to the United States, arrived in New Orleans on the 23th, in the steamboat Columbia.

Chief Justice Kollinsworth, of the Texas Supreme Court, died a few days previous, the Camanche Indians had driven the settlers from their farms near San Antonia. The 4th of July was celebrated with much spirit in Texas.

The elections for president and Vice President appear to excite a great deal of acrimony; it is believed however, that Gen. Lamar and Mr. Burnet will be chosen.

A commercial arrangement has been made between Texas and England, as appears by a proclamation from President Houston, by which the trade and intercourse has been placed on a footing advantageous to both parties.

We are sorry to learn that there was something of a riot in the Jersey woods, opposite Philadelphia on the 1st. It appears that the blacks of the city met in the woods to celebrate the West India Emancipation. A company of Jerseymen attacked them with clubs, &c. and drove them into their boats, and continued to assail them there. We have heard it stated that Alderman Ash was instrumental in quelling the disturbance.

The Jersey City Advertiser says that Mr. Edge, the pyrotechnist and aeronaut has challenged Mons. Laurint, the Boston Balloonist to a balloon race: the prize to be awarded to him who mounts highest and goes farthest. The stake $2,500. The Advertiser naively remarks that it hopes it will be no part of the competition to see who will come down quickest.

Russia.—According to official returns the population of Russia and its dependencies amounted in 1836, to upwards of 90,000,000 souls, including the subalterns of the army and navy absent on leave, the soldiers discharged the inhabitants of the caucasus between the Caspian and the Red Seas, or the tribes of Siberia and Orenburg, which are estimated at 1,456,000.

Whig State Convention.

Delegates to the Whig State Convention, for the purpose of selecting a ticket to be supported by the whigs, for members to the next Congress at the election on the 9th and 10th days of October next, will meet at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 5th of September next, at 10 A. M.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic Electors of this State will assemble by delegates at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 29th of August, at 10 A. M. to select a Congressional ticket to be presented to the people for their support at the ensuing election in October.

Essex Whig Convention.

The Whigs of Essex County will meet at the house of B. Day, in Orange, on Saturday, the 25th day of August, to appoint delegates to the state convention, and such other business as may be deemed expedient.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Summary Justice of Olden Time.

In the early settlement of the Colony of Connecticut, about the year 1642; under the Administration of Edward Hopkins, who for several years was Governor of the Colony, a law was passed by the general court, as it was then called, prohibiting the killing of deer during those months in the year in which they were poor and of little or no value; and subjecting the offender to the penalty of a fine of forty shillings one moiety to be paid the treasurer of the town wherein the offence shall be committed, and the other moiety to him who shall sue for and prosecute the same to the effect. And in case the delinquent shall neglect or refuse to pay such fine, he shall be publicly whipped on the naked body, not exceeding 20 stripes."

Sometime in the month of April, a month which the law forbade the killing of deer, one of the Governor's neighbors called on him and stated that a buck, for a length of time had been in the habit of feeding on a field of wheat near his house belonging to him, and had become fat—praying his Excellency, under the circumstances to give him permission to kill the deer. The governor replied I possess no authority by which I can dispense with the law, but would the circumstance of your poverty and necessity be any excuse? inquired he of his neighbor. "No sir," was the answer, their is no means admissible. The applicant urged it still by informing the Governor that he was poor, had a small family of children—that oldenigh it was out of the season for killing deer yet the buck had fattened on his property, and it would be a favor for permission to kill it.

"I cannot," replied the Governor firmly, "permit any one, under any circumstances whatever, to violate the law—if you should proceed to kill the deer have you any reason to suppose any one would prosecute you?" "I have one neighbor," replied the applicant naming him, "who like myself is poor and who frequently kills deer himself contrary to law, though nobody complains of him—this neighbor, I have reason to fear would prosecute for the benefit of that part of the penalty to which he would be entitled by the statute." "But, said the Governor, "in case you should kill the deer—though I give you no permission to do it, would it not be advisable for you to make a present to that neighbor a quarter of the venison to secure his friendship and silence?" Upon this the applicant without pressing his Excellency further, made his bow and retired.

About three weeks after this, the neighbor who had been named, called upon the Governor, made a complaint, and demanded a warrant against one of his neighbor's for killing a deer contrary to law. "What evidence," asked the Governor, "have you in support of your complaint?" "Why, replied the complainant "he told me himself he killed the deer, and more than that gave me a quarter of venison." "Good indeed," said the Governor, "and how did you find it? was it eatable this time of year?" "O yes sir, replied the complainant, "it was really fat—we have had an open winter, you know sir, and the deer has fed on a field of wheat belonging to the man that killed it, and was as fat as deer usually are in the fall of the year. Upon this disclosure of facts, the Governor suggested to the complainant, whether it would not be better to let the thing pass, and wished to hear any explanation. You ought to consider, said he, we live in a new country—provisions are scarce—many of us experience great difficulties in sustaining our families—you are not insensible that the reason and object of the law was to prevent the destruction of the deer during the season in which they are poor, and not fit to be eaten—you say this venison was fat, and become so by feeding on the man who killed it, this you acknowledge he has given you a quarter of the venison. Now under all these circumstances, would it not be considered unreasonable, and even ungrateful, to insist on prosecuting this neighbor, who by your own account, has been so very kind to you?

But notwithstanding these suggestions, this second Shylock continued to press suit, observing to the Governor, "I know my rights sir,—I know I am entitled to one half of the legal penalty—I know, sir, you are sworn to maintain and execute the law—you cannot, you dare not dispense with my complaint and deny me the benefit of the law." The complaint was filled, a warrant issued upon it, and the delinquent was arrested and brought before the court, and being put to plead to the matters charged in the complaint, plead "Guilty."

As soon as the Governor had pronounced the sentence of the law upon him, the delinquent in a well fed firm and voice replied, "situated as I am I cannot undertake to pay the fine of forty shillings—I feel unwilling to starve my wife and children, by shunning my back from the lash to the whip, I shall offer it as satisfaction in lieu of the fine." The governor accordingly made out and delivered to the constable the warrant of execution—a knowledge of the proceedings had roused a spirit of indignation among the neighbors against the persecutor, and had brought them together to attend and hear the trial. The delinquent being called back to the officer, observing that it would be unnecessary to tie his hands as he should neither make resistance or attempt to escape. The constable tied a light tow string to the end of a short stick and began to perform his duty by stripes more suitable to brush away flies than to inflict pain upon the back of a criminal. The Governor stood by with his law book under his arm, counted for the constable; as soon as ten were numbered, he cried out "stop, sir, let me see what the law reads!" Then opened the book read, "the other moiety to him who shall sue for and prosecute the same to effect." "This prosecutor is entitled to one half the penalty—take him and bestow upon him the remaining ten stripes."

"O, but stop a little," said he starting back "touch me if you dare!" Why I have not been tried—you can't whip me," and made some attempt to escape. But the bystanders, regarding the command of the Governor more than the remonstrances of the complainant, instantly laid hands upon him and the most tender and delicate manner, and having bared his back, and by the assistance of cords placed him in a posture of hugging a tree, made room for the approach of the good and executioner with

"Mr. Governor," said the Governor, "you are acquainted with the circumstances attending this case, and I hope you will perform your duty faithfully."

"Yes, please your Excellency," replied he, "I think I know my duty, and I guess I shall perform it to the satisfaction of all present, with the exception of one only. I have already executed one sentence according to law—this one I intend to execute according to law and equity both."

By the time the ten stripes were told, the sufferer's back exhibited ample testimony of the indignant feelings of the spectators and presented a durable scarry graphic record of the prompt administration of summary Justice.

Indian Corn.—Mr. Colman, in the report of his Agricultural Society or Essex, county Mass., has dwelt largely upon the culture and product of Indian corn. His statements rest upon the most credible authority. In the town of Beverly, yield is rated at fifty bushels to the acre; Wenham and Hamilton, thirty-five bushels; Ipswich thirty and seventy bushels; Old Rowley, fifty bushels; New Rowley forty bushels; West Amesbury, thirty bushels; Amesbury, forty or fifty; Salisbury, thirty five fifty; Newbury, forty, forty-seventy, eighty bushels; Sangus, thirty seventy five bushels; Manchester, sixty, seventy-two bushels; Gloucester, forty, sixty, seventy five bushels; Beverly, forty-fifty bushels; Danvers, forty, eighty five, ninety five, one hundred and ten bushels. This would give an average of fifty four bushels to the acre. The price of corn in the county has now for some time exceeded one dollar per bushel; and it may be fairly estimated at one dollar, when pork is valued at ten cents per pound. The best kinds of flint seed-white sixty pounds to a bushel. Corner in this county which was planted the 10th of June, ripened the 7th of September. Many fields planted the middle of May were fit for harvest the 1st week in September. A farmer, whose premises every where exhibited excellent management writes, that a field of two and a half acres, which he visited was sound and good, and yielded two hundred bushels of ears, equally to fifty six bushels of sound corn, to the acre. The largest crop raised of which there is any return, for the year 1837, on any farm, is six hundred and seventeen bushels.

Mr. Colman concludes his report upon corn with the following general observations:—

There has been no general failure of the corn crop until within the last two years, since the year 1806, when frost occurred every month in the year. In the last two years, however fields have ripened perfectly where an early variety was planted. The Pickwacket corn, an early white seed sowed variety highly productive, and yielding under good cultivation for its kind, 80 to an acre is a been sound and good within many places within the county the present year; and even in the interior of New Hampshire, from which it was brought. The Denton, or Sioux corn, a large twelve rowed variety, has likewise ripened in favorable locations. This is a valuable variety abating the size of the cob. We have ascertained by repeated trials, made with as much exactness as the case admitted, that in thickly set ears the amount of grain upon a large cob bore an equal proportion to its size of the cob, with that found in smaller varieties. The objection to the cob is the quantity of moisture contained in it, in consequence of which it is liable to become heated and mouldy in the bin, though the exterior may appear bright and sound. It is a crop of lasting value, and may be kept in a sound state for years. I have in my possession an ear of corn grown in 1806, as sound as in the year of its growth, and some months ago, my friend, Beckett, planted the last year, came up well. There is no crop, according to its weight, which will produce more beef, mutton or pork. There is none, where the produce is consumed on the place which returns more manure to the land. There is none which may be planted successfully, more frequently on the same land. I know an instance of a repetition thirty seven years in forty, and without any diminution of the product. There is nothing which affords a better preparation for laying down land to grass, as some decisive experiments, which I shall hereafter detail, will show. There is none, all the processes in the management of which, are more simple and certain.

One of the most valuable improvements in the husbandry of the last twenty years is that of planting this crop on an inverted greensward. The sward is completely turned over after vegetation has considerably advanced. The manure is applied to the top of the sod; and the field is then rolled in a thorough manner. The ground is next harrowed and the crop planted either in hills or drills. When the roots of the corn pierce the sod, they find an abundant pabulum of decayed vegetable matter, equal, by as exact a calculation as can be made, to twelve tons upon an acre; and the crop is forced on at the last of the season, when it particularly needs this stimulus and food, to great advantage.

It is important in these cases that the sod should remain undisturbed; and where the corn is cultivated on a flat surface and not hills are made, the land may be immediately laid down to grass, the seed being sowed at the last hoeing; or it may be thoroughly harrowed after the crop is taken off, and then laid down with winter grain and grass seed. The benefits of the decomposed sod being this all secured in the soil, will be felt for a long time; and the comparatively small expense of this mode of management strongly recommends it.

The importance of this crop to Massachusetts can hardly be overstated. The imports of corn into the port of Boston in the year 1837, amounted to 1,725,436 bushels. Immense amounts were likewise brought to other ports; but it has not been in my power to ascertain them. At one mill in Gloucester more than 14,000 bushels were imported and ground at one time the last season. I believe that the demand might be supplied within the state, and to a great profit.

That an average of 3000 bushels of indian corn should be produced to every town in the commonwealth, would not be demanding too much. In some parts of the valley of Connecticut river, ten acres can be found, who themselves produce this quantity. This would be equivalent to nearly that in every town in the commonwealth cultivated 50 bushels to the acre. In one of the most forbidding localities of the commonwealth, in Windsor Berkshire county, among 200 acres 116 bushels have been obtained from an acre. If 200 were done, at 50 bushels to an acre, the corn crop, under favorable circumstances through the state, would yield 2,400,000 bushels, worth as many dollars, when pork is worth ten cents and beef seven cents. The value of the corn-fodder in such case, valuing it only at $5 per acre for fodder, leaving out all the tassels cut for animals would amount to $240,000. There is no reason if any but the most impracticable situations, why every farmer should not cultivate his ten acres; and why many of them should not cultivate their fifty acres.

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the usual branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Much of the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing, fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be chearfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the healthiest in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 3d of May next, the school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshmen and Sophomore Classes of College,—to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as there will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
Higher branches,	6.00

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an location of the above kind. It is within 20 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume
OF THE
New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the first artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Designs by Sully, Wood, Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of prose, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can possibly interest the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the most new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the noted drama and other amusements in the city—and upon the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in the arts and mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, inclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Mrs Sarah J. Hale, and Mr. Morris, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Pay, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of new hundred others, well known to the reading community. To the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, at least, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable ingredients for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to unite all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that every talent, every labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, worthy alike for the parlor of every family, and of every country woman, the accomplished student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would wound the most delicate sensibility upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with handsome new type, on superfine paper, and is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the pianoforte, flute, or guitar. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title-page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms, are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Speech of Mr. Duncan, of Ohio,

In Reply to the Speech of Mr. Bond.—In the House, July 7, 1838.

The same Secretary of the Navy aided the 4th Auditor in fraudulently drawing thousands from the treasury and then attempted to screen him from punishment, by withholding important facts, when sworn before a grand jury and petit jury to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but truth.

He directed the 4th auditor to settle a claim of Allen & Leonard of N. Y, which was originally $3,500, as stated by themselves, but by additional charges, it at length amounted to 10,000, and, under the direction so given 11,000 were allowed, 1,000 of which were forthwith lent to the same fourth auditor, and never paid!

He violated the positive laws of the land in many cases, by causing moneys to be expended for one purpose when appropriated for another.

He made false estimates to Congress for the Naval service, and year after year, spent for contingencies, 9 to $90,000 more than was appropriated, taking it out of other appropriations in violation of law, and concealing it from congress.

He made use of a favorite clerk in the 4th auditor's office, at a salary of 1,400, as agent to make certain payments, and by commissions and a double salary, in violation of law, in creased his compensation to 2,000 a year, for several years.

The most obnoxious case remains to be noticed. The Navy agent at Boston during the late war had advanced money to the account of government, on which he claimed interest. That claim amounting to $7,679, was allowed by the former Secretary in 1819. The agent went out of office in 1820, and in 1828, he made out an account for certain alleged omissions in his former account, on which he charged interest. The claim was submitted to Mr. Southard who wrote thus on the voucher with his own hand, viz.

"Let him be allowed interest upon the aggregate advance of $3,389 72, in conformity with the decision made by Mr. Secretary Thompson on the former accounts.

"5th March 1828. S. L. S."

Accordingly interest was calculated on it up to 1819. This shows that Mr. Southard knew the interest account had been settled. Soon after the late Navy agent trumped up a new account upon his war advances, obviously unfounded and false in every particular. This new claim for interest was submitted to Mr. Southard who wrote, thus,

Navy Department, May 21, 1828.

Sir—Having examined the claims of Andrew Bunker late Navy Agent at Boston, as far as the presence of business during a session of congress will permit, I see no reason to doubt the justice of a claim on his part for interest. Therefore, I think you will be right in allowing to authorize the allowance of any of the items, except for interest notes by paid by him which you will be pleased to settle. For the other claims he will be obliged to address himself to congress, but I do not doubt but his application will be successful. SAM'L L. SOUTHARD.

"T. Watkins, Esq. Fourth Auditor."

The Auditor allowed thirty-one thousand dollars for interest, which Mr. Southard, the Auditor and claimant, KNEW that every just claim for interest had been paid 9 years before! Yes, sir, Mr. Southard knew it, proved by his entry on the voucher, March 5th, not three months before.

But this is not all. This allowance gave Mr. Bunker a ready money. It at once set off a set-off against debts from him to government, leaving him still in debt $9,000. He could not therefore pay his corrupt instrument. But sir, Southard was kind enough to help him out. Money could not be legally advanced to him out of the Treasury, because he was not a disbursing officer, having been two years out of office, but law, nor want of law was no obstacle in these glorious times, which my colleague thinks are soon to be restored. So Mr. Bunker proceeded to that man who was officially reported in debt about $9000, the comfortable additional sum of $30,000 more out of the Treasury! Yes, sir, having allowed a corrupt claim of more than $30 000, he puts the receipts of his bounty in cash by advancing him in the face of the law, 30,000 more, to be covered by claim, equally fraudulent and corrupt; and it was afterwards covered by his friend, the Fourth Auditor, and the Government brought in debt upwards of $40,000, in addition; but the accession of the no. reform Administration of Gen. Jackson prevented the consumation of this outrage.

What was done with the $30,000 thus advanced in cash? I have heard what become of a part of it, but I cannot prove it. So far, I have not spoken what I believe merely, but what I can prove. In relation to the men and things of this day I believe many things which I cannot prove. I believe some 10,000 of the 30,000 advanced, by Mr. Southard, went directly to men in power, or was applied to promote their designs. A charmingly pure Administration that was, where secretaries put the public money in their pockets $25,000 at a tick, and distributed it gratuitously to their favorites, or investments $30,000 at a time! Can the impudent assailants of the present administration justly charge it with crimes like these? Yet; they are zealous to thrust out the men who have put a stop to these corruptions, and put in power those who committed them. What a Fourth Auditor fraudulently got, Secretaries squandered in luxuries at his table, or wog of him in gaming. The bank candidate for the Presidency has been grossly wronged, if he did not, in the way of brag and other games profit more by the current frauds on the treasury than those who committed them. But that was all pure and right; to put an end to it is no reform, for which Mr. Van Buren ought to put out and Mr. Clay put in.

Do you find any account of the men who committed, authorized, or winked at all these corruptions, in my colleague's speech? Not a line, sir. Mr. Southard is now one of the most implicated of executive corruption, but no profits as much by bank abuses as he could formerly have done by government abuses. He is president of one of the gambling bank concerns of the day, an adjunct of the Biddle bank, at $6,000 a year, he holds a public station which gives him $8 per day, and receives his thousands for lawyer's fees. Behold a bank president, a legislator, and a lawyer, at the same time, and of course in the most of his time from his public duties, except when there is a bank question on hand. There is no abuse or corruption in this! to serve the people while under the pay of a bank. Do you think the people, when they understand the game will be content to be governed by bank presidents and bank attorneys? Banks pay better than the people. It is but a small part of $6,000, a member of Congress gets, but the banks can afford dumpling salaries and fees generally to those who represent them in congress instead of their constituents. One Henry Clay, is known to have received from the U. S. bank, $17,000, and probably 20,000 more from the branches.—What a pure government we shall have when the President, the heads of departments, and a majority of congress, shall be officers, debtors or attorneys of banks! Should not the farmers, mechanics, and all honest men lend a hand in bringing about an honest reform?

To bring suspicion on innocent men is one of the arts used by villains to escape detection. Our bank stipendiaries practice upon this principle. Corrupt themselves they are forever bawling corruption against the administration. To add the honors of office, and the emoluments of government, to those of bank corruption which they now enjoy, is their great end and aim.

Let the people not be deceived. Great reform was accomplished by Gen. Jackson in expelling from power the profligate and felonious plunderers of the treasury. Yet it is said there has been no reform, and the people are appealed to to restore the old order of things. Yes, to restore Southard to the Navy, and perchance Watkins to the 4th Auditor's office, and Clay, the head of a corrupt gang, the corruptest of the corrupt, to the Presidency. Whether honest men of any party can relish such reform remains to be seen.

My colleague has attempted to impress the public that extravagance marks the War Department, because there is an increase of expense consequent upon a double amount of business.

To ascertain the facts, I requested Mr. Poinsett to furnish me answers to the charges contained in his speech, and he has been kind enough to furnish me with the following statements. They will be satisfactory to all who see them. Comment is unnecessary. Time has not permitted a further investigation, but the result would probably have been the same. But here follows the statement from the War Department:

Paymaster General's Office, Washington, July 5th, 1838.

Sir—In compliance with your instructions to examine Mr. Bond's speech, and report how his statements agree with the facts as they are known to exist in this office, I have the honour to submit the following statement:

Mr. Bond says "in 1828 the paymaster general employed 3 clerks, whose united compensation was $3,900."

"In 1838 the salary of the same number of clerks is $4,900 besides the messenger's salary."

The estimates submitted to congress for those years, show that the same asked for the clerks and messenger in the paymaster general's office, were as follows:

In 1828—Clerks, $3,900
Do. Messenger, 700—$4,600
In 1838—Clerks and Messenger, 4,700
Difference between the two years, 1,200

Accounted for as follows:

The clerks and messenger are appointed under the act of the 20th April, 1818, which provides for, viz:

1 chief clerk, at a salary of $1,600 1,700
1 clerk, 1,400 1,400
2 clerks, 1,150 2,300
2 clerks, 1,000 2,000
1 clerk, 800 800
1 messenger, 700 700—$9,200

The business of the office has not required at all times so many clerks, and they have been reduced accordingly. In 1838, but 3 were employed and but all at the highest salaries. The numerous volunteers and militia called into service to suppress Indian hostilities, have required the services of such as to be indispensable to re-employ one of the five additional clerks to which the office is entitled, and, in order to retain the services of competent persons, to allow them the compensation of those who have the difference in the estimates of the 2 years.

It is still competent for the Secretary of War, under the act referred to appoint 3 additional clerks at $1,400 each per annum, and one at 800 per annum.

Very respectfully, N. TOWSON, P. M. G.

To the Hon. J. R. Poinsett, Secretary of War.

Comparative statement of the number of persons employed in the Quartermaster General's office, in the years 1828 and 1838.

In 1828—3 officers; 2 clerks; 2 sergeants, acting as clerks; 2 sergeants acting as messengers; total 9.

In 1838—3 officers; 6 clerks; 1 messenger, total 9.

It will be seen that there is no increase in the number of persons employed since 1828. The only change is in the substitution of clerks for sergeants then employed. During the last two years, the duties of the office have been increased fourfold. T. CROSS, Act'g Q. G.

Washington, July 5, 1838.

Surgeon General's Office, July 3, 1838.

Sir, In obedience to your instructions, I have examined the speech of Mr. Bond of Ohio, so far as it relates to this office, and have the honor to report that the regular salary of the clerks in the same office in 1828, was $2,100 less than in 1838, which 10 per cent. was added the last year by act of Congress; this addition continues to the close of the present session of Congress.

From the organization of this office a sergeant was employed to perform the duties of messenger, until 1836, when provision was made for a messenger in lieu of the sergeant, whose salary is 600 per annum, and to which 10 per cent. was added, as that the actual difference consists in paying the messenger by specific appropriation instead of being paid from the army appropriation, as the sergeant was.

BENJAMIN KING, Act'g S. G.

Hon. J. R. Poinsett, Secretary of War.

Office of Com. Gen. of Sub. July 3, 1838.

Sir,—The statement of Mr. Bond in relation to the regulars and volunteers in the field, is not stated correctly.

In 1838, the subsistence department employed four clerks, whose joint compensation was 2,760 dollars.

In 1838 the subsistence department employs 4 clerks whose joint compensation is 5,880 dollars.

In 1828, the number of clerks permanently employed was three, and their compensation was thus:

3 clerks per act May 1816, 2,250
1 clerk per act, 20 March, 1827 800
1 do temporarily employed by permission of the Secretary of War, 300
Making, 3250

At that period, an orderly sergeant was employed as a messenger, who received his compensation from the "pay of the Army."

From the year May 1836, the employment of non-commissioned officers in the departments is forbidden; and it became necessary to ask compensation for a messenger to be paid out of the appropriation for the civil list.

In 1838 the compensation of clerks and messenger, is

1 clerk, per act March 3, 1835 1,600
1 clerk, 1,200
1 clerk, 1,000
And the messenger paid by appropriation, 500—$4,300

By act March 3d 1837, Congress added ten per cent to $3,800 of the above, making, 380
And 20 per cent to 500, making 100— 480
Which added to the above makes $4,850

being 1000 dollars less paid to permanent clerks than in 1828 by Mr. Bond; hire where the resolution of Feb. 1, 1835, passed by Congress, authorizing the Secretary to furnish rations to persons in Florida, the Secretary of War directed that a special account should be kept of those issues, and authorized to employ a clerk to do it, whose salary was fixed at $1,000, which constitutes the amount as stated in the speech.

When the department was rendered permanent, 1833, the clerks were brought into the pay of the civil list, which approximate that of the clerks employed in the civil bureaus, as he was aware that it was inadequate to the duties performed, and responsibility attached to the situations; but in every instance where compensation has been paid, it has been done invariably under acts of Congress, except in the two instances above mentioned.——1150 clerks employed, 6 Q. M. G.

Hon. J. R. Poinsett, Secretary of War.

Assertion 1st.—The business of Indian affairs was discharged by 5 or 2 of the 17 clerks of the War dep't.

Fact.—In 1828, four clerks were employed in this business. The Secretary then conducted a much larger portion of the correspondence, and supervised the details far more extensively than now.

Assertion 2d.—In 1828, there was one superintendent of Indian affairs, who was paid 1,500 per annum.

Fact.—In 1828 there was one superintendent, at 1500, and three governors of territories acting as superintendents. one at 1,500 and two at 1750. These appointments were made by Mr. Calhoun in 1821, 2, and 3; to the governor of Michigan in 1821; of Arkansas in 1822; and of the late governor of Florida in 1823. (See the following extract.) aggregate compensation 4,500 dollars.

Extract of a letter from the Secretary of War to Wm. D. Bell, dated 25th October 1823.

"Upon a review of all the circumstances, the following has been adopted for the settlement of your claim as superintendent of Indian affairs in Florida, to wit

"For your services past when there was no Indian agent for Florida, an allowance will be made to you of $1500 per annum, which is now allowed to the Indian agent.

"Since the appointment of an agent for the Territory by law, and for the future, you will be allowed 750 per annum, to cover all necessary expense in your intercourse with the Indians, that being the same as is allowed to the superintendent of Indian affairs."

Assertion 3d.—In 1838, we find four superintendents of Indian affairs, with salaries of 1,500 dollars each.

Fact.—In 1838, there is 1 superintendent at 1,500, and governor of Iowa at 1,500, and governor of Florida, for both offices is 2,500. Adopting the principle of division established this session, and his pay as superintendent will be 1,500; aggregate 2,500. The other two governors are superintendents as Indian agents, receiving only the pay of the agents as fixed by the law of 1834.

Assertion 4th.—In 1828, there were 21 Indian agents, (3 at 1,500, 4 at 1,000, 1 at 800, 4 at 750, 8 at 600, and 2 at 400.

Fact.—In 1838, ten Indian agents at 1,500 dollars, and 14 sub-agents at 750 dollars.

Fact.—In 1838, there are but 8 agents, besides 2 acting superintendents, and 14 sub-agents, and no more are wanted.

In 1828, the appropriations for the superintendents and Indian agents was 31,000.—In 1838 it is 16,500. In 1828, the sub-agents it was 15,200.—In 1838, it is 13,000. In 1828 the appropriation for interpreters was 6 dollars less than in 1828. The average pay in 1828 was 400 a year, making for the 39 employed that year 15,600. Appropriated in 1838, 9,300 dollars.

Assertion 6th.—In 1838, we hear of a commissioner, whose salary is 3,000 dollars, and 12 clerks and 2 messengers, who as joint compensation is 19,400 dollars.

Fact.—In 1828, Gov. Cass and Gen. Clark, at the invitation of the Secretary of War, prepared a report containing among other things "a code of regulations for the government of the [Indian] department, and for the general administration of its affairs." The 1st section provided for the appointment of a commissioner at 3000, the 2d his duties; the 3d the number of clerks; the 4th gave him the familiar privilege of the franks, and the 5th a messenger. These five sections are stated to contain substantially the provisions of a bill from the committee on Indian affairs; to the Senate in 1828, and a report from the same is submitted to congress by the Secretary of War, "with respectful but earnest recommendation."

The number of clerks now in the Indian office is 12. In 1828 there were 11. In 1838 there were 12 employed and in '32 a messenger. In the latter year the business of emigration was committed to the commissary general, who employed 4, and a messenger. In 1833 2 were appointed to superintend the removal of Indian reservations. The increase in 1830 and 31, was occasioned by the act of May, 1830, providing for an exchange of lands, and the treaty with the Choctaws in 1830, the stipulations of which, their removal was immediately commenced. The same treaty, that with the Creeks in 1832, and that with the Chickasaws in '32 and '34, give employment to about 10,000 individuals and heads of families, which were the first provisions of the kind to any extent, authorized & in the judgment of congress the employment of the so late as the '36. Of the number, 12 in the business of emigration has been transferred to the Indian office, clerks 12, and messengers 2.

Thus far for the 2 years specified, independent of treaties authorizing the employment of Indian commissioners and agent in 1828 was 61,950; in 1838, it is 72,900; less in 1838, 10,950. This is exclusive of the acting superintendents, who have been appointed in stipulations of which, their removal was immediately commenced. Sir:—The following enigma and solution were published, some time since, in the "N. Y. Weekly Messenger;" and though the letter appended over the signature of "Ruth," is was written by the Rev. G. Enigma.

Celestial it lived with the angels in light;
It fell with the fallen, impelling their flight.
It lives with all living, yet sounds in their knell;
And still with the soul must eternally dwell.
It flashes through lightning, and flits with the clouds
And its voice in the peal of the bell swells aloud:
Yet a lay with the minstrel, it warbles most sweet,
And the gale with its melody still is replete.
'Tis alike with the lamb, and the lion of prey;
It lives in the light, yet is found not in day.
A dwelling it holds in you beautiful isle;
Yet sails with the vessel, through many a mile.
'Tis the world (and it large) it doth strictly belong,
Tho' claimed by the glad, and the sorrowful throng.
It is found with the lowly, and yet lives in style:
'Tis the prop of the lover, and dwells in his smile.
'Tis the friend of the friendless, the lone and forlorn
And all that is lovely its image hath borne:
Yet alas! with the hateful, securely it stalks;
And though silent, is found in the prodigal's walks.
No share can it have in death, sorrow or pain,
And yet in the battle-field falls with the slain.

Cedar-Brook. CLEMENTINA.

SOLUTION OF CLEMENTINA'S ENIGMA.

It is not in heaven; it is not in earth,
It is not in Eden the place of its birth:
It is not in ocean, it is not in air,
'Tis not in the sky, nor in any thing there:
'Tis not in the sun, nor the moon, nor the spheres,
The scores have not seen it in thousands of years;
How then could "it live with the angels in light,"
And fall "with the fallen impelling their flight?"
Nor "all that is lovely its image hath borne,"
For woman's fair face hath never once worn
A scrap of its beauty, except on her lip,
When she smiles, and of love would just take a sip.
'Tis not in her eyes, 'tis not in her mind,
How then with the soul can it dwell unconfined?
It is not in music, it is not in sound,
Nor in harmony sweet was it ever yet found:
It dwells not with truth—but I often espy
It in closest alliance with—what?—with a lie!
It's a part of the gospel—a part of the law!
And joined with a promise keeps sinners in awe:
It is found in Old England—yes, twice, I suppose,
At beginning of life, and again at its close.
I've seen it in hills, but never in mountains,
I've seen it in wells, but never in fountains;
It is not in wine, nor in any strong drink,
Such as brandy or whiskey, if rightly I think:
Yet I've seen it in liquor again and again,
And in lotion and laudanum those southern of paint!
I've seen it in islands, I've seen it in lakes,
E'en Greenland's cold coast of its presence partakes.
In the straits of Magellan I've seen it,
I have seen it at Cape Farewell;
I have seen it in Holland, and Ireland too,
And again in the island of Yell.
I have seen it Lisle, but never in France;
I have seen it in Italy, too,
But never in Rome, nor in mild Penzance,
Though in Cornwall you'll find it anew.
I have seen in Liverpool twice I am sure,
And in Limerick once I declare,
I have seen it in London, and Dublin and Leith,
And Walcot—though I never was there!
This comes little thing, whose'er it be,
Is not to be slighted by any;
In account books it stands for nearly five dollars
And in numerals ten times as many.
Without it, a poet looks just like a poet;
Without it your gold is a god,
Which never can save you from guilt or from fear,
From terror, from wrath, or the rod.
And if Clementina should not like my key,
I pray her to furnish a better;
But she'll find notwithstanding, in 'love' or in 'say,'
Her "Enigma" is nought but a letter'

Pharaoh.

Thus saith Jehovah! let this people go!
The King was on his throne arrayed all gorgeously,
In regal purple rich with fretted gold
And crowned with sparkling gems, while snowy lawn
Was mingling with its folds luxuriously.
The crown of Egypt was upon his brow,
The nobles of his land were gathered round,
Throughout the royal pavilion where he sate;
And the wise men, the Magi of the east,
The priests, the soothsayers, astrologers,
And the most cunning sorcerers, were there.

And also, there, apart from all the rest,
Yet even at the foot of Pharaoh's throne
Two men arrayed in humble garments stood.
One spoke not, but with meekly folded arms,
Awaited silently the king's decree.
His form was finely moulded, and his face
Had much expressive beauty though his eye
Spoke with a saddened feeling—and his brow
Amid the clustering curls that shaded it
Told that the freshness of his youth had passed.
The other form was taller, and his limbs
Were moved to manlier strength—his bold dark eye
Sent his proud glances round him fearlessly;
While with his mantle gathered o'er his breast,
And his right arm extended as he spake,
His poured his eloquence to Pharaoh's ear.

"Thus saith the Lord Jehovah, God Omnipotent!
Let thou this people go—their wives, their children,
Their flocks of cattle and their snowy flocks,—
And whosoever lingereth unto them,
Shall with themselves, unransomed, all be free—
Say not within thy heart as thou hast said,
That his unchanging will shall pass away.
And yet let us remember! nay yet hear!
With words denouncing wrath his purpose!
Why shudder these men with Heaven! can thy wrath
now
Cope with the wrath of Jehovah, who wields the thunder,
And looketh on the whole extended earth,
Even as a little thing!—Thy heart is raised,
Yea lifted up in pride and vanity,
For these exalted power and high estate—
But know'st thou not that He who rules o'er all,
Can bring thee low e'en to the very dust,
And change thy glory into confusion?
Then waken not the tempest of his wrath,
Nor scorn His mandate—let this people go!"

But Pharaoh hardened still his heart, till God,
With a high hand brought out his chosen people,
And 'whelmed the might of Egypt in the wave.

Oh ye! who still in cruel bondage, worse
Than e'en the Egyptian, hold the ill-starred slave,
Do ye not dread that God's long slumbering wrath
At length will pour his terrors upon you?
Are slavery and oppression aught more just
Than in the days of Moses?—and if not
With how much deeper hue does the dark stain
Attach itself to you, who proudly bear
The name of Christians—and declare yourselves
The servants of the perfect law of Him,
Who died upon the cross! is slavery just?
Ye dare not say it is—ye dare not say
The negro is not God's own heritage,
The work of his own hands—of flesh, one blood,
With you who crush him to the earth!
What, is it just that a white skin should give
To man the power to tyrannize o'er man?
That hundreds of the human race should toil,
To feed the wealth and luxury of one—
A scanty sustenance their only meed?
Yet in this age of intellectual light,
And high profession of religious faith,
Even now there are (may Heaven forgive them,) those,
So wholly lost to what they owe themselves,
Their country and their God, that they would lift
Their voice in favor of the wrong, and e'en pollute
The very Senate House, with arguments
For the vile cause of slavery—oh shame—
Shame on them ten fold!—did not their hot breath
Spread a dark gangrene o'er the very walls,
Like the dark plague spots on the Jewish tents,
In days of old? what, freemen! will ye bear
To be insulted thus, upon the spot
That of all others, like a polished mirror,
Should be o'erclouded with the slightest breath
That spoke of stern oppression? rouse ye, rouse,
And tear the veil of blindness from your eyes!
Deceive yourselves no longer with dreams
Of wealth and interest—look upon the north—
Is she not rich and prosperous as yourselves?
And yet no slave is there—no hapless wretch,
To blight the soil with curses and hot tears.

But do you say that you lament the evil,
But that you made it not, nor is your power
Efficient for the cleansing of the stain,
Though you should gladly lend your aid therein.
If but the path were open!—then awake!
No longer sit with idly folded hands,
And conscience lulled securely into rest,
Until destruction with a voice of thunder,
Break on your guilty torpor—oh beware!
And harden not your hearts like ancient Pharaoh,
Lest worse fate than even his befal you.

And you, friends of the cause of liberty,
Shrink not, tho' you be strangers in your course,
Even as was Israel at the Red Sea wave,—
Nerve every faculty—call every means,
And every energy of heart and mind
Forth into action—summon up your strength;
Fly argument, persuasion, eloquence,—
Bear patiently—reply—remonstrate,
Of prejudice, self-interest, and all else,
That may have twined round your opponent's heart:
Yet combat still, remove and overpower them,
Until no longer o'er the smiling land,
Is heard the voice of tyranny, and all
Who breathe the same free air alike are free:
And may God bless you! and the franchised slave,
Remember only in his grateful prayers,
That he has ever drained oppression's cup,
And that he owes his liberty to you.

To the Memory of H. B. N——

Who perished in the Pulaski.

There was one heart among that fated band,
One mind, that formed for high and noble ends,
Displayed itself in early youth, and gave
Bright hopes and amazing prospects to his friends;
A star, whose dawning had but just begun,
A pleasant landscape in the morning light,
A pastern, noble, moral, just and true
To all who knew him, all whom he had known.

The Heavens were clouded and the star went down,
The landscape disappeared in horror's night;
So when the burst of Death, the shriek of pain
Was borne upon the sea-breeze o'er the wave,
So perished he, among the good and brave.
Weep! memory—weep! for on thy urn alone
His hallowed virtues shine, when he is gone;
And though his name be blotted from the Earth,
Yet friendship's tear shall gild his sacred dust.

Sewing Silk.—Messrs Grant & Champin, of this village have left at this office a skein of sewing silk of their own manufacture, pronounced by judges to be of the very best quality and finish. The yield of the rate of 9 skeins from 65 cocoons. The profits in this business when extensively engaged in, and well conducted, seem to be large indeed; and we think our people here are beginning to take the hint. Mr. A. N. Easton, also has just shown us several skeins of fine silk, being the first of his manufacture. When our farmers understand the thing a little better, crop of silk will be as regularly produced as a crop of wheat.—Belvidere Apollo.

A Royal Example.—A noble Lord, not particularly remarkable for his observance of holy ordinces, arrived at Windsor, not a month ago, late one Saturday night. He was brought down for your Majesty's inspection but said, 'none papers of importance, but as they must be gone into at length. I will not trouble your Majesty with them to night—but request your attention to them about morning.' Tomorrow morning!' repeated the Queen, 'to-morrow is Sunday my Lord!'—But reasons of state please your Majesty.'—'More to answer for!' I know not, my Lord;' and of course you could not consider them earlier to-day. I will if those papers are of much vital importance, attend to them after welcome from church to-morrow morning.'

To church went the royal party; to church went the noble Lord—and, much to his surprise, the sermon was on the duties of the Sabbath!—How did your lordship like the sermon?' inquired the young Queen. 'Very much, your majesty, replied the Nobleman, with the best grace he could. 'I will not confess it from you,' said the Queen, that last night I sent the clergyman the text from which he preached. I hope we shall all be the better for it.' The day passed without a single word on the subject of the papers of importance'—which must be gone into at length.' His lordship was as it always is graceful and entertaining; and at night, when her majesty was about to withdraw, 'To-morrow morning, my Lord,' she said, at any hour you please—as early as seven if you like we will go into those papers.' His Lordship could not think of intruding at so early an hour on her majesty—nine would be quite time enough' 'as they are of importance, said the Queen, 'as they are of importance, my Lord, I should have attended to them earlier, but at nine be it. And at nine her majesty was seated to receive the Nobleman, who had been taught a lesson on the duties of the Sabbath, and it is to be hoped he will not quickly forget.—Court Journal.

Uses of a Foolometer.—I am astonished that statesmen neglect the common precaution of a foolometer, with which no public man should be unprovided. I mean the acquaintance and society of three or four British fools, as a test of public opinio. Every Cabinet Minister should judge of all his measures by his foolometer, as a navigator crowds or shortens sail by the barometer in his cabin. I have a very valuable instrument of that kind myself, which I have used for many years; and I would be bound to predict, with the utmost nicety, by the help of this machine, the precise effect which any measure would produce upon public opinion.—Mr. Fox very often used to say, "I wonder what Lord B. would think of this." Lord B. happened to be a very stupid person, and the curiosity of Mr. Fox friends was naturally excited to know why he attached such importance to the opinion of such an ordinary common-place person. "His opinion," said Mr Fox "is of much more importance than you are aware of. He is an exact representative of all common place English prejudices, and what lord B. thinks of any measure, the great majority of English people will think of it." It would be a good thing if every cabinet of philosophers had a Lord B. among them.

Rev. Sydney Smith.

The Great Valley.—A writer in the Knicker bocker speaks of the Mississippi Valley as one that has no parallel on earth. In length may be estimated at not less than 2500 miles, and its main breadth at from 1200 to 1500. He adduces many facts to prove that it was covered by an immense ocean, and that the great change was brought about by repeated and long continued convulsions. He describes this valley as not only the most delightful, the richest, the fairest portion of the earth, but capable of sustaining a population of a hundred millions.

Wedding-Night of George IV.—In the Life and times of George IV. is this paragraph:—"Judge." said his much abused wife, "what it was to have a drunken husband on one's wedding day, and one who passed the greater part of his bridal night under the grate where he fell, and where I left him!"

SILK.—We understand that Judge Van Dyke of this county, received the first premium for cocoons under the late law for encouraging the growth of this fabric. And that in Princeton and its neighborhood, much is doing in the business and more is about to be done. We are also gratified, that in Lawrence and Marion townships and in Hopewell in Hunterdon, several farmers are determined to invest something in the enterprise. It is our firm conviction that there is nothing to which the attention of our farmers can be directed that holds out so certain a prospect of large reward. The more multicaulis trees, though commanding a high price, are constantly sought for, and the demand is largely in the increase. In burlington, the operations will be quite extensive. The cconery of the Messrs. Cheney's is now in operation, we are informed, and we would advise all who can spare the time, and who feel any interest in the matter to visit it within a week or two. They will there see the worms feeding on the most improved plan, and the mode of reeling silk from the cocoons; the facility and simplicity of which operation, we venture to say, will astonish those who have as yet paid but little attention to the subject. The time is not far distant when the production of this article will add much to the wealth of New Jersey. All who have tried it thus far are sanguine of very profitable results.

While upon the subject we should mention that we were shown last week elegant specimens of sewing silk, produced by Dr. Hunt, and Mr. Hoag, of Palmington, Bucks county and by Mr. Milner of the same place. The farmers are the men for this business—their wives and children may be very profitably employed, if they do not wish to devote any other part of their farms to it.—State Gazette.

A new method of making Boots and Shoes.—A man in New York has invented a new way of manufacturing boots and shoes, which is thus partially described;

"1st. The whole lower portion, or sole and inside of the boot or shoe, is made with but one seam, instead of two, as at present: thus increasing the safety and durability of the manufacture. 2dly. The Boots and shoes are much more beautiful in appearance during their whole wearing in consequence of the unpeg-leather being turned from under the foot, and inserted in a peculiar channel cut in the insole, which prevents the upper leather boot from creasing and wrinkling, and thus increasing the value without encroaching the use of the article. 3dly. By pegging with the turned-over leather as above described, no more peg or nail in the foot. 4thly. The sole is sewed to the upper, and is not pegged, so that the peg holes to fill up the latter quite close to the sole and inside, which is now accessible to the wax, the part on which the foot rests does not become irregular and uneven, nor is the sole so soon thrown out of place and unsightly worn away."

Emancipation Celebration.—Wednesday last, the 1st inst. was observed by the colored people of this city and as a day of rejoicing, on account of the entire abolition of slavery in the British west Indies. In the morning about 1000 assembled in this city, and spent the day in festivity and rejoicing. They took up their location in a grove lot on the west side of the city, where an address was delivered by one of their number, after that they partook of refreshments prepared for the occasion. They remained together during the day and separated in the evening in peace and quietness among themselves, and without molestation from others.

At a late exhibition of the Royal Dublin Society the display of articles for luxury or utility is said to have been very great. Among other curious things exhibited was a churn worked by steam introduced through the agency of its own machinery. The principle of this machine has, as is stated, been understood for many years, but this is the first time that it had been brought into beneficial practice.

Making Butter.—Judge Buel says: "It has been found that the best and most butter is obtained when the cream is about the temperature of 58 deg.—and if the temperature is over 60 deg. the quality is inferior and quantity diminished. Hence every dairy should have a thermometer."

The Concord, N. H. Gazette says upwards of 300 people were gathering whortel-berries in that vicinity on Saturday week, and that there must be 300 bushels still on the bushes.

Extract from a sermon, by the Rev. Albert Barnes on subjection to the laws.

Preached June 12,1838.

2. Allied to this, I mentioned secondly, as indispensable to the supremacy of the laws, the success of the temperance reformation.

No mob is found, probably, except under the influence of exciting drinks. No infuriated frenzied man of mind can be urged on to deeds of desperation and blood, except in connection with and under the influence of ardent spirits. Tumults and riots, and scenes of lawless disorder, commence usually near the low tavern and dram-shop; masses of excited and enraged mind become consolidated and reckless, commonly under the influence of this poison. In the riot at Alton the mob prepared themselves for the work of blood in which they were about to engage, at a tavern in the city, and repeatedly repaired there during the disgraceful scenes of that night, in order to renew their zeal, and fire their ardour, "and screw their courage to the sticking point." Had there been no tavern there; had it been impossible to have obtained the poison; there is every reason to suppose that the nation would have been spared the disgraceful scenes of that ill-fated night. And if this nation were to become universally temperate; if the designs of the temperance reformation are ever carried out; if ev ery dram shop shall be closed, and the state ceases to lend its patronage to the vending of the liquid fire; if every man becomes a sober and a temperate man, we might safely guarantee the universal execution of the laws; nay, we might almost disband the criminal courts in the land; Be it remembered that near nine-tenths of the cases of infractions of the laws, of the assaults, and of the affrays, and the broils and the murders, are wholly under the influence or intoxicating drinks. Nine tenths of the taxes which we pay for the support of justice; nine tenths of all the expenses in jails, and juries and judges, originate from the fact that the state under its high sanction, and for a price, causes these fountains of poison to be opened at every corner of the street, and her ten thousand agents employed in making paupers and criminals, and in maintaining riot and disorder throughout the land.

The papers state that John Jacob Astor lies dangerously ill. It is also stated that this gentleman has recently made a donation to the Corporation of New York of $350,000, for the establishment of a Public Library, including a lot of land, eligibly situated for the erection of a building for the accommodation of the institution. Mr. A., we believe, is considered the most wealthy individual in the United States, and for many years has been very liberal with the means which Providence has placed in his keeping; not only to public charities, but his private munificience has contributed largely in relieving the necessities of the needy.—Elizt. Jour.

Upwards of 3000 men are now at work on the Croton Water works. The average monthly expenditure is 140,000 dollars.

Sportsmen have entered upon the annual campaign on Long Island. One gentleman is said to have killed 106 snipe in 6 hours, on the 3d inst.

Lead and copper mines have been discovered in Davidson county, N. C. and are now successfully worked.

Important despatches were received by the British consul in New York through the Great Western, for the governor of Canada and for Halifax. They were forwarded by express, so that the reply may go out with the G. W. on the 16th.

100,000 axes, besides hammers and other articles are annually manufactured in the little village of East Douglass, Mass.

The present population of Savannah is 11,872, of which 5,000 are slaves.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, August 14, 1838.

"I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man." THOMAS JEFFERSON.

☞ The Democratic Republican Electors of the township of Westfield, are requested to meet at the house of John M. Clark, on Wednesday, the 15th inst. (to-morrow) at 6 o'clock, P. M. to appoint delegates to attend the County Convention to be held at Camptown, on the 18th day of August inst. and to transact such other business as may come before said meeting.

August 8th.

The steam ship, Great Western arrived again in New-York, on Sunday, 5th inst. 14 days and a half from Bristol. Though the news brought is 16 days later than before, it is of but little interest. She was only 13 days in her outward passage. She brought out 130 passengers, a full cargo of freight, and a large bag of letters, for all which she receives about $30,000. Some have said that the experiment of steam navigation on the Atlantic would not prove profitable,—judging from this trip it would seem to be. The expenses of a passage cannot much exceed 10 or $15,000, and if she receives $30,000, must be making money. On her passage she encountered a four days gale without cause of apprehension, but was thereby much delayed, otherwise the passage would have been made in 11 days. She will sail on her return on Thursday, of this week, 16th.

No material change in the markets.

The Hon. Richard Rush sailed in the Mediator from London, on the 10th.

Joseph Bonaparte is said to be negociating with Lord Ashburnton, for the purchase of the Birkland estate in Devonshire, for his future residence.

A great fire occurred in Cairo, the capital of Egypt, on the 21st of June; 600 houses were destroyed,—100 of which were large commercial houses, but most of the merchandize was saved.

It is stated in the papers that another large private bank is to be established in New York, to be placed under the direction of John Delafield, late president of the Phœnix bank; and that it is to be based upon the wealth of John J. Astor.

On account of much opposition, and from fear of an injunction, the directors of the U. S. bank have withdrawn their intention of establishing a branch of the "monster" in New York. The bank, however, will go into operation, under the names of individuals, with the aid of the U. S. bank, and are preparing to go into business immediately, probably before any of the others.

☞ On Friday, the 3d inst. near two weeks since, the woods near Mr. William Darby's, in Scotch Plains, caught fire from the ignited wadding of a gun, and are still burning. Several acres have been burnt over, and its power instead of being diminished is constantly increasing. The Rahway Herald says that a large quantity of fencing is destroyed, and that the earth being of the substance of peat, burns several feet into the ground.

A great fire occurred at Hudson city, on Tuesday last, which destroyed about 60 houses, including dwellings, stores, barns, shops, &c. It caught fire in a storehouse on the wharf by a spark from a steamboat passing. Probable loss, about $100,000; partly insured.

Democratic Essex County Convention.—The Democrats of this county will meet at William Ball's, Camptown, on Saturday, 18th of August, inst. at 2 P. M. to appoint delegates to attend the state convention at Trenton, and other necessary business.

It is stated in the papers that the rail-road between Trenton and New Brunswick will be finished by December next. There will then be a complete rail-road communication between New York and Washington—and by steam.

Whig State Convention.

Delegates to the Whig State Convention, for the purpose of selecting a ticket to be supported by the whigs, for members to the next Congress at the election on the 9th and 10th days of October next, will meet at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 5th of September next, at 10 A. M.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic Electors of this State will meet by delegates at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 22th of August, at 10 A. M. to select a Congressional ticket to be presented to the people for their support at the ensuing election in October.

Essex Whig Convention.

The Whigs of Essex County will meet at the house of B. Day, in Orange, on Saturday, the 25th day of August, to appoint delegates to the state convention, and such other business as may be deemed expedient.

POETICAL.

☞ The following beautiful lines were written by the person, whose name we have taken the liberty of publishing, to the memory of Henry B. Nichols, only son of Mr. D. B. Nichols, formerly of Bridgeport, Ct. but lately of Savannah, and a much esteemed and very near relative of the editor of the "Union," aged 17.—Ed.

For the Plainfield Union.

Lines.

Dedicated to the Friends of H. B. Nichols, who perished in the Pulaski.

BY MRS. E. CLEMENTINA STEDMAN.

"Not unto that bereaved home,
He'll return, where tears are shed:
He comes not, and he will not come,
Till the sea gives up her dead."—TAPPAN.

No pen may paint the horrors of that night,
That fearful night, of death upon the wave!
When age and youth, the beautiful, the bright,
Went down together, to a watery grave!
Oh! hearts are blending, cheeks with tears are wet
And many a bosom sighs for love 'twill ne'er forget.

All ties were severed, in that fearful blast,
Yet each bereaved circle mourns alone,
Deeming its sorrow, hath all grief surpassed,
A cup of bitter, drank before by none!
And each, hath some kind, sympathising voice,
To tell how sorrowing hearts, in God, may yet rejoice.

There was a youth, amidst that perished throng—
An only son! of promise, such as were
Around those hearts to whom he did belong,
More than the cords of mere parental love;
Such, as when virtue, talents, all conspire
To swell the lofty hope, and feed ambition's fire.

From the bland South, where fortune made their home,
They turned in summer, to their native clime,
The northern haunts, where childhood loved to roam
To scenes, from memory ne'er effaced by time:
Their wonted charge, was but this darling son;
And his fair sister-mate, she too, an only one!

But now, their pride, the son, had passed those years
On which maternal love its fondness pours;
And might go forth alone, without the fears
Which childhood makes: and to these northern shores
They sent him, with that conscious pride of heart,
Which nerves affection, from its idol o'en to part.

But, not without a mother's tears he went,
Nor yet unguarded by a mother's prayer;
A father's blessing too, its errand sent,
And bade him trust a heavenly father's care:
That ONE, whose smile though oft the cloud conceals,
Hath purposes of love, eternity reveals.

But, to the sequel—'tis a dark, dark tale,
Of troubled waters, and a scattered wreck!
Of mingled prayers, and tears, and terror's wail;
An unsupported, loaded, floating deck,
Parted at length, in sink with fair and brave,
Down to the "deep, deep sea"—that solemn cave!

And of a youth! whose dawn of hope was bright;
Who vainly plead to live life's little day!
Not for himself, but, that his parents might
In hope's fruition, crown his stay;
'Twas lost—that prayer! amid the boistrous sea,
And the aspiring youth, who breathed it—where is he?

'Tis answered—in the drops that silent flow
Down the pale cheek of her who gave him birth!
'Tis answered—in the care-worn marks of woe,
Traced on the temples of a sire on earth,
Whose hope on ocean cast was seen no more!
Destined to early try that sea which hath no shore.

Cedar-Brook, Aug. 11th, 1838.

"I am an American Citizen."—We derive the following gratifying incident from an account of a late visit to the museum of the College of surgeons, in Dublin, by a correspondent of the Worcester, Mass. Spy:

To obtain admission to this museum, an introductory note from one of the members of the society is generally required. I was unaware of the fact, previously to going, and consequently was unprovided. But upon stating that I was an American, I was immediately admitted. This is not the first instance in which my being a foreigner, and an American, has obtained for me privileges which otherwise would have been refused. In former days, the declaration, "I am a Roman citizen," was an Ægis of protection to those who could say it with truth; now, the similar one, "I am an American citizen," not only insures protection, in this country but opens to our countrymen places; which, in some instances are closed even to Englishmen. It gained admission, for me into the House of Commons, on a day when the crowd was so great and the demand for seats so numerous, that the speaker had refused to grant the privilege to many who had requested it,—the day upon which the consideration of the Queen's message was before the House: In several other instances, have I been more than usually thankful, that I could say "I am an America Citizen."

Cure for the sting of a Wasp or Bee.—A Liverpool paper states as follows; "A few days ago happening to be in the country, we witnessed the efficacy of the remedy for the sting of a wasp mentioned in one of our late papers. A little boy was stung severely, and was in great torture, until an onion was applied to the part affected, when the cure was instantaneous. This important and simple remedy cannot be too generally known, and we pledge ourselves to the last above stated.

Sixteen persons (patriots) were sentenced at Toronto on the 5th inst. to be hung on the 25th August, having been convicted of high treason, on the Short Hills affair. Their names are—Linus Woon Miller, George Cooley, Norman Mallory, and Wm. Reynolds, Samuel Chandler, Benjamin Wait, James Gamble, John Grant, Maydock MacFadon, John James McNatty, George Buck, David Taylor, James Waggoner, Garret Van Camp, John Vernon and Alexander McLeod.

They are all young men mostly under 25 years. Miller was a law student in Chatauque Co., New York, and when the judge asked the prisoner if they had any thing to say why sentence should not be pronounced, he addressed the court at some length; denying that he had done anything worthy of death, and declaring that he had not aimed to subvert the government of the country. The sentence appears to have effected the audience somewhat, but the prisoners themselves seem to have behaved as boys do who have become accustomed to the threats of promise breaking parents. Their friends will solicit a pardon from Sir Geo. Arthur, and it is presumed that he will grant it.

Rail Road Accidents at N. Orleans.—The cars on the Pontchartrain Rail road ran off the track a few days since, and one of them was crushed, killing one negro and severely wounding six or eight others. The accident happened from a pile of cinders from the locomotive having been carelessly emptied on the rails. On the same road a few days previous, Dr. Weiddemon of N. Orleans, in descending from the cars, as they had not time to stop; got his foot entangled and dreadfully smashed. To the above we must add the following from a New Orleans paper. It is incredible—

Miraculous Escape.—As the half past five o' clock cars from Carrolton were passing Hearts-ville yesterday afternoon a black boy was riding on horseback near to the track. When the engine came near to the horse, he stumbled and threw the boy on the middle of the track, but too late to stop the engine; and strange to relate, the whole train passed over him without injuring him in the least. He jumped up, scratched his head, and exclaimed "You can't kill dis nigger no how Master Ingine."

It is stated that the Great Western made $40,000 on her two last trips.

A large number of counterfeit 50 dollar bills on the Pa. bank of the United States are in circulation.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Consisting of the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservations of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.
With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.
TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.
Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.
No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired.
All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the American Presbyterian.

The Sacrament near the Hermitage.

A grateful to the notice previously given, the Senior Editor of this paper, together with the Rev. Mr. Scott, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper last Sabbath in the church near the Hermitage.

This church is known on our Presbyterian records by the name of Ephesus, and was erected many years since on the domain appertaining to the Hermitage, principally by its venerable proprietor, the Ex-President of the United States. It is beautifully located, and though not spacious, or even finished, yet it is a delightful Summer Temple for the calm and pure worship of God. Such, at least, it seemed to us during the services of the late solemnity. While such seasons are generally the most joyous and elevating which believers can enjoy on earth, the one to which we have alluded afforded more than ordinary interest, because among several interesting accessions to the church was numbered one peculiarly interesting—we mean the Ex-president himself.

It may well be imagined that the scene was thrilling when this veteran in years, and in the service of his country, professed allegiance to the Sovereign of all worlds and promised an eternal fidelity to him who demands the homage of all created intelligence. How could it be otherwise? A form of no common appearance for inspiring veneration, was standing before the Assembly. It was the form of one who had been long known as amongst the most distinguished of his country's generals—who had often perilled his life in her defence, and who, under God, had achieved one the most memorable victories recorded in the annals of modern warfare. Nor is this all. The same venerable form had filled as a statesman, the highest seat in the Government of his country, and had been clothed with the highest civic honors which that country in all its unequalled freedom and independence could bestow.

He had passed through a life of most eventful scenes—he had returned to his own hermitage—to the tomb of his beloved consort—to the few remaining friends of his former days—to some of the surviving children of those friends, and in their view, was about to pledge himself to become a soldier in a new army, and to engage in the performance of duties of higher importance than ever commanded the attention of earthly thrones or confederated states. And to add, if possible to the impressiveness of the scene, the partner of his adopted son dear to him, indeed, as a daughter, together with a beloved neice, were also about to seal with him their covenant, for the first time, to be the followers of the Prince of peace. The whole of the preparatory service was deeply interesting, but when the time arrived for him and his relatives, and friends, to arise and take their seats at the table of their ascended redeemer, a scene of weeping gratitude and joy, seemed to pervade the whole congregation.

To see this aged veteran, whose head had stood erect in battle and through scenes of fearful bearing, bending that head in humble and adoring reverence, at the table of his divine master, while tears of penitence and joy trickled down his care worn cheeks, was indeed a spectacle of most intense moral interest. No one indeed, could question the sincerity of his profession of faith in the son of God. The whole world acquainted with him, whether friends or foes, must acknowledge that his lips have spoken in all his varied difficulties the meaning of his heart, and that his actions have always corresponded with his sentiments.

May God bless and uphold him in his last days and make them his most comfortable and happy days. And when the time of his departure shall arrive, may he come to his grave not only full of years, but full of peace, joy and holy triumph.

In all real conversions to God let us ever remember, "that it is not by might or power; but by my spirit saith the Lord." To his grace then be all the glory.

P. S. The health of the General has been generally comfortable during the season.

From the Pennsylvania Freeman.

The "First of August."

Yesterday was a glorious day—an epoch in the world's history.—Then Slavery, which for two centuries and a half had filled them with sorrow, and wrong, and cruelty was annihilated, forever, in almost all the islands of the British West Indies.

The sun of yesterday rose upon freemen only, as it shone over the Blue mountains of Jamaica—the rich fields and orange groves of Bermuda and Antigua. St. Vincent, St. Christophers, Tortola, Barbadoes, Dominica, Nevis and Montserrat, are also free,—self-delivered from the curse of oppression by the voluntary decision of their own legislatures,—the act of the slaveholder himself.

Glory to God in the highest!—FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND human beings stood up in the light of yesterday, girded with the manhood of Liberty—slaves, chattels, merchandize no longer, but taking their places in the great family and brotherhood of man!

The fruit of the mission of Jesus of Nazareth, of him who came to preach "deliverance to the captive, and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound," is ripening before us. The most glorious and convincing testimony to the divinity of that mission ever afforded to earth is made manifest at the hour. Infidelity has now no excuse for its blindness. The mightiest miracles of the past fade into dimness, in the light of this demonstration of the everlasting truth of the oracles of God.

What hath God wrought!—For two and a half centuries slavery sat enthroned in the islands of the West, the Lord of the Carribean sea,—exalting itself above all that is called God' exulting in the pride of its strength, banishing religion and purity, and filling them with obscenity and lust and unimaginable crime, with the rioting of demons, and the wailings of the damned. Where is it now? The light of the Gospel has blazed upon the whole system of cruelty, and it has fallen like dagon beneath the presence of Israel's God.

Where is the christian who will not on his knees offer thanksgiving for the blessed privilege of witnessing the mighty events of this day? Where is the soul in which the emotions of joy at the deliverance of the oppressed will not kindle with fervor, as the news goes up to the ends of the earth, and throughout all coming time? It will strengthen the hearts and gladden the hopes of the missionaries of christianity, in the isles of the South, on the frozen Labrador, or scorching under the sun of the tropics in Burmah and Africa. They will point to this triumph of Christian benevolence, as the brightest token of the heavenly origin of their religion.

Heretofore, revolutions and changes that have shaken nations to their centre, have only been effected by violence and the hand of arbitrary power. However pure in principle, they have ended in practical crime. Though born of generous purposes and benevolence, their cradle has been rocked by the convulsion of the social elements, and their baptism has been one of blood. But this mighty event, this tremendous revolution which has lifted half a million of chattels into the pale of humanity, has been peaceful as the advent of its holy originator, when the Angel-hymn floated over the hill country of Judea: "Glory to God in the highest! Peace on Earth, and good will to men." No blood—no tears—no strife—no accusing recollections of violence and crime to overshadow the morning sunshine of a peoples deliverance; a moral victory of Truth over a Falsehood; of Benevolence over Avarice and Hate; of everlasting justice over Criminal Expediency. To our Heavenly Father be all the glory. The work is His own.

Our editors, political and moral, are silent in regard to this event. So are our pulpits. With the stupendous miracle blazing upon the moral Heavens, the professed ministers of that Gospel, to the divine origin of which it is a direct and powerful testimony, are silent as the grave. No burst of thanksgiving to God, for the glorious token of His love to the children of men! No prayer that the great work may go on to its final and universal triumph!

Let them keep silence. Their silence will not stay the out stretched arm of the Deliverer! The sun of freedom will shine no less brightly, because these practical infidels in the Church close their eyes in wilful blindness. The voice of emancipated thousands—the earthquake shout of Freedom, which now shakes the islands of the Carribean to their coral foundations, will not swell less freely to heaven, because these man-dire closing their ears against it.

The bells which yesterday tolled the hour of midnight from the church towers of Kingston and Bridgetown, rolled their death-knell of Slavery, not in the three islands of the Antilles alone, but through out the civilized world. In vain shall politicians talk of compromises and constitutional guarantees in vain shall a time serving and mammon-loving priesthood pervert the holy scriptures into a defence of slavery. God is against them. He has come down to deliver His groaning and afflicted poor. On the sky which arches over the Western Archipelago He has written his decree of gainst oppression in Letters of fire. It is now beginning to flash on the eyes of American slaveholders an intolerable brightness—the hand-writing on the wall to the Belshazzars of the South. God grant they may repent while there is time and before the voice of his displeasure thunders among them.

"Ye have not hearkened unto me in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbor: behold I will proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the sword, to the pestilence and to the famine."

The result of the Ploughing Match at Hoboken August 1st will be seen by the following certificate or report of the Judges—

The committee appointed to make a decision at the trial of ploughs at Hoboken on the 1st day of August, under the direction of the American Institute, have attended to that duty and report—

That eight ploughs were entered for competition and comparison, and they regret that the circumstances of land, weather, and time allowed were unfavorable to as public a trial as would otherwise have been desired. They have been anxious to do full justice; and taking all the prescribed conditions and qualifications into view, they are agreed—

That Minor and Horton's plough is fully entitled to the premium offered on the occasion.

That Ward's plough is entitled to the second honorable notice.

That Howard's plough is of admirable construction and workmanship, and much to be esteemed for its work in ground and with team adapted to it.

That Beebe's plough is much to be commended for its lightness of draft, and is capable of doing good work.

That Bergen's plough and ploughing were creditable to him.

They regret that owing to an accidental breaking of the point, Mr. Beach of Philadelphia, was obliged to withdraw his plough, before a fair trial could be made of it.

In closing their report they express their satisfaction at the excellent condition and fine management of the team with which they were favored on this occasion by the kindness of Mr. Stevens.

All which is respectfully submitted,

Deaf and Dumb Boy.—A few years ago, a clergymen paid a visit to a deaf and dumb asylum in London, for the purpose of examining the children in their knowledge of divine truth. A little boy, on the occasion, was asked in writing "Who made the world?" He took up the chalk and wrote underneath the question, "in the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth."

The clergyman then inquired in a similar manner, "Why did Jesus Christ come into the world? A smile of delight and gratitude rested on the countenance of the little fellow, as he wrote, "this is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation that Jesus came into the world to save sinners." A third question was then proposed, eminently adapted to call his most powerful feelings into exercise; "Why were you born deaf and dumb, while I can hear and speak?" Never, said an eye witness, shall I forget the look of resignation which sat on his countenance, as he took up the chalk and wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight."—Watchman.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instructions will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	5.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages, no extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.

Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College. N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the Trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabeth-Town, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the state of New Jersey. Both the village in the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

Terms.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

The literary matter will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—theatre and hospital reports—fashion of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the select drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and all the various miscellaneous and rewding relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of the highest order.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, existing in such volume or equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In no former volume, like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and speckled package of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country; —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and the country gentleman; a parlour of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive delicacy, the Mirror will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Murray. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Title page, and a Table of Contents, will be given. There are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Speech of Mr. Duncan, of Ohio,

In Reply to the Speech of Mr. Bond.—In the House, July 7, 1838.

My colleague has recourse to the official statements of the amount received by the Globe office during the last and present administrations, as proof of the extravagance of the Republicans and ground of suspicion against the honesty of the editor. He gives the sum total, through the terms of two presidents, as $220,000. My colleague will allow that printing must be done for government. It is the glory of our free government that all its acts are exhibited in print, and full information afforded to an enlightened community of every thing done by its public agents. The only questions brought up by my colleague's display of the public printing done in the Globe office are has it been done well?—cheaply?—honestly? By bringing together the labors of a great establishment from its foundation to the present time, my colleague would insinuate an accusation of exhorbitant charges against the government on the part of Blair & Rives. He showed his caution in thus screening by innuendo. He was well aware of their unimpeachable honesty, and dare not make a specification against them. But a member from Tennessee, (Mr. Crocket,) in a private letter charged that 3 or $400,000 had been paid them for the speeches of Messrs. Benton and Calhoun. His colleague (Mr. Carter,) knowing that this exceeded by half all that had been paid that office for all the Departments and Congress, declared that a tariff had been laid on the pay of the clerks to make up the sum. As soon as these clergymen found the editor of the Globe, challenged an investigation by a committee of Congress. They shrunk from meeting the man they had injured. Mr. Blair then appealed by petition to refer the matter to a committee. The special committee was ordered, and then commenced the effort of the Opposition to defeat the inquiry, which they knew would disgrace the accusers. Only 6 weeks of the session remained, and they knew how difficult it would be when the business was huddled into this short space, to make up a postponed question. An hour, therefore, after the inquiry had been ordered, a Conservative, (Mr. Hopkins of Virginia) moved a reconsideration. This hung up the decision two weeks, and was, I am afraid, intended for that purpose. The subject was again taken up, and every artifice resorted to to defeat inquiry. It was first proposed to refer it to a standing committee, composed of the accusers, (Messrs. Clay and Bond and others making a majority of opposition members,) making the accusers themselves the judges. The accusers (Bond, Crocket and Carter) exerted themselves in this attempt, but it was voted down. An effort to lay it on the table was then made, in vain. At last, after the committee was appointed, when it asked the ordinary power of sending for persons and papers, the opposition opposed it, and moved the discharge of the committee.

This failed, and the committee organized for the examination. It opened its sittings every morning at 8, but none of the accusers appeared to make good their charges. At last the committee addressed a note to Mr. Crockett, inviting him to support his allegations by evidence. He replied that if the investigation was to be confined to a scrutiny embracing only the accounts with the departments and congress, he would have nothing to do with it; but if the committee would inquire into the private accounts of the editor, he would examine witnesses! How this evasion was treated I have not been informed. But I am authorized by Mr. Blair to state that he is willing to submit his private accounts to the closest scrutiny. The bold assailants skulking thus, the committee could only seek out testimony on the charges, by interrogating those who from the nature of the case, must know their truth or falsity.

Mr. Crockett's charge, in writing, with his signature, and secretly circulated, read thus:

"Hundreds of thousands of Messrs. Benton's and Calhoun's speeches as I am informed have been printed gratuitously and been circulated by the party into the land."

"My own opinion is that they are paid for out of the Treasury, and I believe it could be proven; at least I should like to know how Duff Green has been able to print so many thousand speeches, and find himself. No man can believe it who is not blind by party prejudice. The cost, I think, cannot be less than 3 or 400,000 dollars.

As explained by his colleague, in the presence of the house, and of Mr. Crockett, and published in the Intelligencer, it stood thus:

"My colleague did not intend to say that the money was taken directly from the treasury, but that the public money is indirectly applied to this specific purpose. If the officers of the government are paid extravagantly, and their salaries made sufficiently high to give the officer a reasonable compensation, after contributing seven or eight dollars for party purposes—to pay for these partisan speeches, if you please, which is said to be coerced from them by this party discipline—is not virtually defraying the expenses out of the treasury, to all intents and purposes? It is as much so as if the editor of the Globe was directed by the Government to print 10,000 copies of that paper every week for subscribers, and draw the pay directly from the treasury. The effect is the same: the government in either case, pays the money, and improperly. Sir, were not the salaries of those officers increased 30 per cent. upon the vote of the party that reigned in this house,—increased just so much as is said to be the tax laid for party purposes."

This imputation, thrown out by secret letters, and promulgated on the floor of the house, which they intended to keep pending until after the elections, was put down by a cloud of witnesses. The committee addressed a note to all the departments, which was responded to by them all. I select the shortest of the replies as a sample of the whole,

Treasury Department, July 5th, 1838.

Sir:—Agreeably to your request, I herewith enclose my answers on oath to the questions propounded by the committee of the H. of R. Levi Woodbury, Secretary.

Hon. J. J. McKay, &c. &c. &c.

I, Levi Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, testify as follows, in answer to certain interrogatories propounded to me on the 3d of July 1838, in behalf of the select committee of the House of Rep. of which the Hon. James J. McKay is chairman.

Interrogatory 1. Do you know of any instance in which printing not properly chargeable to the United States, has been paid for out of the public funds, either to the editors of the Globe or other printers?

Answer. I know of no such instance. No printing, to the best of my knowledge and belief has been done for my office, except such as were desirable for the efficient and satisfactory discharge of its public duties.

Interrogatory 3. Have any of the officers of your department been tariffed, or required to pay for documents or speeches to be printed in the Globe office? If so, state the amount.

Answer. Nothing of the kind has ever come to my knowledge; nor have I the slightest reason for believing that any thing of the kind has ever been done either directly or indirectly; all the officers connected with this department have been called on for information, and as soon as prepared I will enclose it to the committee.

Interrogatory 3. Have any alterations been made as to the prices of printing, has been introduced, differing from that under your predecessors.

Answer. I am not aware that any change as to the prices or mode of printing. LEVI WOODBURY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 5th July, 1838.

Treasury Department, July 5th, 1838.

Sir: Agreeably to the intimation made by me in my yesterday's communication, I transmit the replies numbered from 1 to 12 made to me by the heads of the several bureaus in the 4th interrogatory.

They all answer it in the negative.

Treasury.

Navy Department, July 7th, 1838.

Sir: I herewith transmit the answers of myself and clerks, and that of the clerks of the Navy Commissioners' office, to the queries propounded in your letter of the 3d inst.

Respectfully, &c. &c. &c. J. PAULDING.

Hon. James J. McKay, Chairman, &c.

District of Columbia, ss.

Personally appeared before me, Robert Getty, one of the justices of the Peace for said district, the Chief Clerk, Secretary of the Navy, of the United States, and being duly sworn, saith:

1. That he does not know of any instance in which the editors of the Globe have been allowed for printing for the Navy Department a compensation greater than that usually paid to other printers for similar work.

2. That he does not know of any instance in which printing not properly chargeable to the United States has been paid for out of the public fund either to the editors of the Globe or any other publishers; that he does not know of any of the officers of his department being tariffed or required to raise funds to pay for public documents or speeches to be published at the office of the Globe or elsewhere.

3. That no change as to the mode or prices for printing done for his department has been introduced differing from that customary under his predecessors.

J. PAULDING, Sec. of the Navy.

Sworn and subscribed this 7th day of June, 1838.

ROBERT GETTY, J. P.

Navy Department, July 7th, 1838.

The undersigned, clerks in the Navy Department, respectfully state, in answer to the inquiry addressed to them, that they have not been tariffed or required to raise funds to pay for public documents or speeches to be published at the office of the Globe or elsewhere.

Sworn and subscribed before me, at Washington, this 7th of June, 1838. ROBERT GETTY, J. P.

A declaration like the above was sworn to and subscribed by the clerks in the Navy commissioners office, before C. W. Goldsborough, U. S. N.

Post Office Department, July 9th, 1838.

Sir: I duly received your letter of the 3d inst. and proceed to answer the interrogatories therein propounded;

1 The interrogatories are those given on page 12.

Answer 1. The books of this office show that no bill has been paid for stereotype prices. Blanks for post offices are printed at a price below ordinary. The blanks for the department are printed at prices long established. The blanks at prices at the post office have been made by me; but whether the prices are in no cases higher than are now usually paid for private printing of a similar character, I am unable to say.

Answer 2. I do not.

Answer 3. Never, so far as I know or believe.

Answer 4. The only changes so far as I recollect are the following: It was necessary for printers of post office blanks to furnish paper at a fixed price. In consequence of complaints as to the quality of paper I ordered an increased price. It is believed the department gets its blanks, at a cheaper rate, including paper.

If was customary up to 1819 to publish the large annual Post office advertisement in two newspapers in this city, and to 1825 it was customary to have it inserted in the daily and tri-weekly impressions of the same paper, and to pay for it in both at the same time, permitting the printer to publish it twice a week. I directed it to be published 12 times entire in the tri-weekly only, making it necessary to issue extra sheets, thereby increasing his expences and largely diminishing his profits. The printer's contract is in force on the old plan.—Not having time to look into these matters in detail, these statements are made as true to the best of my recollection.—A severe indisposition for 3 days has prevented my earlier answer here. AMOS KENDALL.

Hon. J. J. McKay, Chairman, &c.

There are 444 clerks in all the Departments. A large majority of these are in opposition to the administration; and yet with perfect unanimity they bear testimony to the utter groundlessness of the charge. They will not put a pretence to found it on. It was made to influences the elections under the hope that the inquiry might be baffled the remnant of this session, or until the fabrication had done its work for the party. To defeat this iniquitous scheme, I felt myself called on to seek the same evidence the committee has obtained, and I use it to put in a proper light those who would abuse their high station to destroy the reputations of innocent men for party objects.

It appears that no increase of price on work done at the Globe office has in any instance taken place; but that great reductions have been made on several; and I learn that printers have measured the work done at the Globe office, and made the requisite calculations, have proved to the committee that all was according to law, and right, so far as they have progressed.

To enable the public to judge of the excess of profits which my colleague would make the impression had been made by the Globe office, I have obtained from Mr. Rives, who has the entire control of the office, the following statement:

"The prices which Congress pays for printing were fixed by 3 disinterested practical printers in 1819. Two weeks after the Globe office commenced printing for congress, the wages of journeymen printer were raised 10 per cent. by the society. That rate has continued ever since; but the price paid by congress has been unaltered

The Globe office and materials cost $40,000, interest, 2,400; annual wear 5,000; the hands have paid in six years 140,000; the paper used for government cost 68,000.

It will be seen by this that the actual expense of the office, in connection with the public work is $268,000; a sum greatly exceeding its receipts from the treasury. Yet a reasonable profit has been made upon public work, by newspapers, speeches for members of congress, jobs for individuals, and advertising.

I now turn to the public printing executed by the oppositon press in this city. One would think that they, from the outcry, were almost starving while the Globe was rioting in an enormous monopoly. My colleague, almost petrified with horror, at the Globe's having received $220,000, in 6 years, does not think it worth while to mention the trifling sum paid to the Intelligencer and Telegraph, in the same six years, by both of which they were in the opposition. Every body knows, (if it is of record,) that the National Intelligencer office, houses and lot, types, presses and profits are deeded to the U. S. bank, for facilities to the amount of 90 or $100,000. I find that the editors of the Intelligencer have drawn the following sums from the Treasury in the 6 years that the Globe interfered with its income.

Gales & Seaton received during 6 years, beginning 1st Oct. 1831, and ending 30th Sept. 1837,	$432,423
Duff Green received	363,304
Together	795,649
For the extra session, in the name of Allen, up to July 7th. Gales & Seaton have received	120,000
In addition to this, is an appropriation just passed of 49,000, for the purchase of Gales & Seaton register of debates, (volumes made up from the pages of the Intelligencer) and other books which they have printed and have on hand, for distribution among the members at public expense. Gales & Seaton's part will be at least	43,000
For work ordered at this session not yet paid, to be added to the receipts of Gales & Seaton	15,000
The sum total already voted is	178,000

If the next session of 3 months may be calculated upon as the ratio, (and there is always more done, in proportion, in a short, than in a long session,) it is a fair calculation that one-third of the expense already incurred may be set down for the coming short session. That is 59,000

The following results are shown by the comparison:

1st. The editors of the Intelligencer will have received for printing for one branch, during the 25th congress, and for old books distributed among the members, $17,000 more than the whole amount which my colleague has drawn together for work done by the Globe office, during 6 years.

2d. It shows that the two opposition presses during the very period in which Mr. Bond so much condemns the Globe, received about one million! and yet he sees nothing reprehensible in it!

If the difference of amounts received by the 2 offices is amazing the mode is no less so.

Creation, a Catastrophe.—The Boston Post states that some down easter thus describes himself:—"I am a real catastrophe, a young creation. Mount Vesuvius on the top, with red hot lava pouring out of the crater and routing nations—my fists are the Rocky Mountains—arms, liberty poles, with iron springs. Every step I take is an earthquake—every blow I strike a clap of thunder—and every breath I breathe is a tornado—my disposition is Dupont's boat, and goes off at a flesh—when I blast, there'll be nothing left but but a hole three feet in circumference, and no end to its depth!

Receipt to make Native Tea.—The infusion of good, well made mellow hay in boiling water, in the manner of tea, about three quarters of an ounce for two or three persons, is an excellent beverage at breakfast or supper, and as much superior to the dried leaves of China as gold and silver to copper and lead.

This native tea is as healthful as it is grateful to the palate; it is sacarine and aromatic, instead of bitter, stimulating to the spirits in the morning and composing the nerves at night, promotes digestion and increases the appetite.

Hints to Young People.—No. 2.

Choice of Employments.—In selecting an occupation, do not expect to find one that will make you prosperous and respectable, without your own good behaviour and best care and exertions. Your occupation will serve you, in some respects as the vessel serves the mariner; it may bear him safely over the waters, but, let it be what sort of a vessel it may, it must be properly managed. Unless skilfully navigated, no one craft will carry him more safely and surely to his destined haven than another. The strength and beauty of the ship are useless under careless management. So is the most lucrative and popular profession. Unless you serve your business well, do not expect it will reward you. We may say of any useful calling what the bible says of wisdom or religion; "exalt her and she shall promote thee; she shall bring thee to honor when thou dost embrace her."

When we speak of a choice of occupations, we seem to imply that there are some pursuits, which are indispensable to the well being of society, and which yet are likely to be rejected by every one who is at liberty to select his business for himself. But there is always some one for every trade. There is no occupation necessary or useful to the world, though productive of ever so small a reward for labor which does not suit some one. This is a most interesting fact.—Some of the most necessary employments are in themselves most offensive, yet there are always some to follow them; to whose taste and genius they are adapted; whose ambition ranges in such spheres. It frequently seems as though the persons were made for the occupation and the occupation for the persons. The truth doubtless is, that the persons become in a certain degree conformed or assimilated to the employment, by practice, and grow into a certain fitness for their pursuit: but there seems to be in many cases, a natural turn, as we say, which determines the temporal destination of the man; and drove him to the particular pursuit to which his life is to be devoted. And on the other hand, we see some engaged in professions and arts for which they seem not to have been born. It is a strong hyperbole yet not wholly insignificant, which was used of a certain musician, when it was said that he was born with the fiddle bow in his hand.—Some children and youth, either on account of the taste and practices of their parents, or from some early impressions received nobody knows how or when, appear as distinctly marked for their particular professions as if they had been born with the implements of those professions in their hands. Where this predisposition appears, it seems best to indulge it; and let it direct the choice. It is never worth while except for very strong reasons to counteract with violence what seems a natural genius, and to attempt to repress it for sake of giving prominence to some feebler propensity which can hardly be expected to succeed against its powerful antagonist, in controlling and directing the powers of man.

CHARLES CRAYON.

From the New Jersey Eagle.

Among the many worthies of the Revolution, of whom New-Jersey has good reason to boast few deserve a more conspicuous place in the history of the times than Capt. Nathaniel Ritz Randolph, of Woodbridge. He was one of the bravest and most intrepid of men—twice he was offered a Colonel's commission in the regular army but he preferred the command of his own select volunteers to any other service, and with them performed the most desperate deeds of valor. He and his men were encompassed by a greatly superior force of the British. Their motto was "death or liberty." The contest was maintained with great slaughter on both sides, until he stood literally alone, wading in the blood of his companions, who lay in heaps dead and wounded around him. In this condition he seized a musket, and being a man of great muscular strength, defended himself, and knocked down his enemies right and left, with the butt end of it, until the British commander became heartily sick of the contest, and begged that for God's sake he would desist, and spare the sacrifice of human life, seeing that he must eventually fall under their hands dead or alive. He coolly replied that he was not yet a prisoner, and again placed himself in a posture of defence. The British officer renewed his entreaties; telling him he was the bravest man he ever saw, and it was a pity so valuable a life should be sacrificed in so unequal a contest: promising him the kindest treatment. At length being covered with wounds, and weak and faint from fatigue and loss of blood, and no longer able to raise a weapon of defence, he reluctantly gave himself up under a pledge that he should be well treated and exchanged the first opportunity; which promise was faithfully performed, and he was soon again at liberty to take up arms in defence of freedom. His bravery intrepidity, and gigantic strength made him a terror to the British wherever his name was known; but the Tories and "London Traders" were his most inveterate foes.—A whole squad dared not encounter him in the day time, even when alone. On a certain occasion when he was on a scouting expedition on Staten island, a party of Tories secretly dogged him into a house in the evening and after he had laid aside his arms rushed in upon him and made him prisoner, where to his great grief and mortification he remained near a year before he was exchanged. At the head of his volunteers he encountered a company of Hessians, one of whom being somewhat separated from the rest took deliberate aim and wounded Capt. R. in the left arm. He plainly saw from whence the ball came, (the companions being very near together,) and walking deliberately up to the fellow, as though he would say something to him seized him under his sound arm and brought him in triumph a prisoner, whilst his gallant comrades stood motionless with surprise. Capt. R. was killed by the musket ball in a battle near Elizabethtown, and buried at Woodbridge with the honors of war.

From the Alexandria Gazette.

Editorial Writings.—A few days ago the National Intelligencer laid some sensible remarks on the subject of editing a paper. One idea expressed has frequently struck us with great force. Many people estimate the ability of a newspaper, and the industry and talents of its editor, by the variety and quantity of editorial matter which it contains. Nothing can be more fallacious. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to pour out, daily columns of words—words spoil say and all subjects. His ideas may flow in weak, washy, everlasting flood. He may commence at the beginning and unite him to string them together into bunches of onions: and yet his paper may be a meager and poor concern. But what is the labor, the toil of such a man, who displays his "leaded matter" over so large, ly, to that imposed upon the judicious, well-informed editor, who exercises his vocation with an hourly consciousness of its responsibilities and its duties, and devotes himself to the conduct of his paper with the same care and asiduity that a sensible lawyer bestows upon a suit, or a human physician upon a patient—without regard to show or display? Indeed the more scrutinizing part of editing a paper, is but a small portion of the work. The industry is not even shown there. The care, the taste, the time employed in selecting is far more important—and the fact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than by any thing else; and that, we all know, is half the battle. But as we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, and his labors understood and appreciated by the general conduct of his paper—its tone, its temper, its manner, its uniform, consistent course, its principles, its aims, its manliness, its courtesy, its dignity, its propriety. To preserve all these as they should be preserved, its enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the newspaper establishment, which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they can find time, or "head room," to write at all!"

Young Men.—Most young men consider it a great misfortune to be poor, or not to have capital enough to establish themselves in their outset in life in a good business.—This is a mistaken notion. So far from poverty being a misfortune to him, if we may judge from what we every day behold, it is really a blessing: the chance is more than 10 to 1 in favor of success of such a young man, over one who starts with plenty of money. Let one who looks back twenty years; and see who commenced business at that time with abundance of means, and trace them down to the present day; how many of these can now boast of wealth and standing? On the contrary, how many have become poor, lost their places in society and are passed by their own boon companions with a look which painfully says, I know you not!

Society.—When neighbors dwell together in peace, visit in friendship, converse for useful improvement or harmless amusement, take part in each others property and affairs, and assist in the government of their families, are candid to excuse and careful to conceal each other's casual or accidental failings; studious not to form real and dangerous faults; who abide in their calling and quietly pursue their own business, and meddle not with the temporary concerns of others, a blessing will attend their labors, and success will smile on their designs. Their intercourse will be easy, pleasant and virtuous—and a foundation will be laid for the happiness of succeeding generations. But if each is bound up within himself and looks with indifference on all around him, or beholds his inferior with contempt, and his superior with envy; if every meeting is filled with impertinent and angry controversy, and every visit employed in tattling and backbiting, if neighbor detames a neighbor, and each watches for advantage against the other—if an acquaintance receive you with feigned smiles of welcome and friendly greetings and abuse your character when your back is turned; if every brother will endeavor to supplant, and every neigh bor to walk in slander, one had better flee to the solitary mountains, and dwell alone in the earth.

From Tait's Edinburgh Magazine, for July.

The British Colonies.—The recent revolt in Canada has had the good effect of directing public attention to our Colonial system, and to the enormous expense it entails upon the people of Britain. Our army in the colonies, the India army excepted, is 24,450 men, cost, £4,100,000, and two millions for the navy employed in defending the colonies, and at least another million for the maintenance of the civil establishments; so that the people of this country are annual ly taxed seven millions for the support of our col onies. Were we to break out (and colonies have always been the most fertile sources of wars,) that expenditure would unquestionably be doubled. The average produce of the revenue of late years, after deducting the interest of the debt, has been about fifteen millions, one half of which is expended on our colonies. This is surely a state of matters which cannot long be submitted to.

Various editors throughout the country have been vieing with each other, to see which could fabricate the best case of absent-mindedness.—Among all that we have seen, none has been noticed better than the following: "A young lady carried a letter to the post office, dropped herself into the box instead of the letter, and did not discover her mistake, till the clerk asked her if she were single."

Morning.—The best part of the day for most purposes, is in a great measure lost by most persons. There is no question of it. It is either lost in sleep—between sleeping and waking—feeble efforts to rise—or in a trifling state of indecision what to take hold of first. Let habit have its due influence in the case, and there can be no doubt but that early morning is the most advantageous time for effort of any kind, physical or mental. What an important part of most people's lives are lost!

A gentleman the other day visiting a school at Edinburgh, had a book put into his hand for the purpose of examining a class. The word 'inheritance' occurring in the verse, the querist interrogated the youngster as follows:—"What is inheritance?"—A. Patrimony."—"What is Patrimony?"—A. Something left by a father."—"What is it it left by a mother?"—A. Matrimony.

The Great Eclipse of 1838.—The eclipse we perceive begins to be the subject of comment in some of the newspapers in our country and the early notice is no doubt owing to some peculiar circumstances connected with the phenomenon itself. For many years past we have had, at stated intervals, a large eclipse of the sun; either of which we anticipated with much interest by way of eminence, the last of the series—for we shall not witness another similar eclipse for 16 years, nor a total eclipse for nearly a generation to come! and we cannot withhold the solemn reflection, that this will be the last remarkable eclipse that many of us shall be permitted to see. Yes, before another conjunction of the heavenly bodies, which will cause a total obscuration of the sun's rays, a whole generation of our species will have passed the ordeal of death, and the retribution of eternity! and yet the undisturbed affairs of the Almighty move on, and these splendid spheres launched from his hands, with undeviating certainty, fulfil their destined round—praising their creator either in lustre or in shade! But we leave our readers to moralize upon the subject at leisure. We hope the day may be fine—that a cloud may not obscure the horizon or dim the setting sun's effulgence—that all may enjoy the pleasure of beholding—though none can experience the delight of such a spectacle but the student of Nature and the humble worshipper of its great Author.

The eclipse will not be total but annular—that is the moon's apparent diameter being less at the time than the sun's, cannot hide the whole face of the sun, but will leave the whole margin visible, like a luminous ring, to all persons within a certain distance from the central path. The eclipse will occur September, 18th, 1838, between 3 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Good Luck.—The following remarkable assertion was made by Lord Exmouth, one of the most famous of the British Admirals:

"I have never known what fortune meant. I never chose my situation, and never had a friend but the kings pennant; but I have always gone where I was sent, and done what I was ordered, and he who will act upon the same principle may do as I have done."

Hut of Peter the Great.—Saardam is remarkable for being the residence of Peter the Great of Russia, when he worked here as a common ship carpenter, in order to make himself acquainted with the details of naval architecture. The hut in which he dwelt is at one end of it, and has been covered with a brick building by the princess of Orange, sister to the Emperor Alexander, who purchased it at a large price of its former proprietor. It consists of two large rooms and a loft, in which the royal mechanic kept various specimens of the art. The furniture used by him is carefully preserved, consisting of an oak table and three chairs, a recess with folding doors served him as a beadstead. Over the chimney piece is the following inscription, Pedro Magno, Alexander; and on an oval table is another in Dutch and Russian intimating that nothing is too little for a great man.

Subterranean Discovery.—Quite an excitement has been produced by a late discovery at Southend, near the rail road. Mr. George Bosset-hill, in digging a well, at the depth of 20ft encountered a log lying horizontally. It was perfectly solid, and about 22 inches in diameter, the workmen were obliged to cut it away before they could go on with their labor. After digging 7 feet deeper they came to a perfect bed of clam and oyster shells, of very fresh appearance, and apparently just opened," says our informant.—N. Y. Daily Whig.

Hydrophobia.—The Rev. J. G. Fisher was formerly a missionary in South America, and is anxious to call the attention of the public to the probable utility of common salt as a remedy in cases of hydrophobia, if at least the opinion be correct, that what will cure the bites of venomous serpents will be efficacious in the former class of cases.—He says, "I actually and effectually cured all kinds of very painful and dangerous serpents' bites, after they had lasted several hours; but immediately after I had applied my remedy, the pain subsided and the patient calmed—which remedy was nothing else than common table salt; and I kept it on the place or wound, moistened with water till all was healed, within several days, without ever any bad effect occurring afterwards. I, for my part, never had an opportunity to meet with a mad dog, or any person who was bitten by a mad dog (I cannot therefore, speak from experience as to hydrophobia;) but that I have cured serpents' bites always without fail, I can declare in truth." Mr. Fischer then quotes Dr. Urban's practice from Hufelands German Medicial Journal. He had six methods but his most successful was to apply a pledget soaked in any salina solution to each wound, or to each place where the teeth had made a mark without breaking the skin and retain them by bandaging. The best solution of salt one ounce, or one ounce and a half, to a pound of soft water, and the wounds is to be kept constantly moistened with it. The lint is to be renewed and soaked twice a day; the places wetted every two hours, and even washed by the patient, especially if any indications of a relapse, as itching or pain should manifest themselves.

The life of man may be only an hour-glass to some being of a higher order; and they, perhaps, say, when three-score years and ten are up, "What! another hour gone! Dear me, how time flies!"

A contemporary says, that "the machinery of the Great Wen are will last forever," and adds, "afterwards it can be sold for old iron!"

A glutton was dining at a hotel, who accidentally cut his mouth, which was observed by a Yankee, sitting near by, who bawled out, "I say, friend, don't make that ar hole in your countenance any larger, or we shall all starve to death."

A Polyglott Bible has been printed in England in nine different languages.

Much instruction may be gained from the two following pieces.

Justice in Alton.—On the 20th of May E. T. Tedd, of Alton, was tried for selling intoxicating liquors without license, in violation of the city ordinances. The justice was S. Buckle, Esq., and the counsel for defendant U. F. Linder Esq., men who gained a name in the warfare against the freedom of the press, last November and afterwards. The jury was made up largely of rum-sellers. The justice charged them to acquit the defendant if they found the ordinance unconstitutional, though reminded by the prosecuting attorney that such a charge was wholly out of order. The jury on being sent out, betook themselves to eating, drinking, card playing, window smashing, and other such like moboeratic amusements—at last could not agree. The Illinois Temperance Herald thus speaks of the plea of the redoubtable Linder:

"In the course of his remarks, he said he had come there to clear his client, and he meant to do it.—He boasted, in open court, in tone of triumph that he had cleared all the men recently indicted for riots in Alton except one, who he said was fined for only ringing a bell. So he meant to clear his present client. Here several of the jurors, one who was one of the individuals the counsel had cleared, smiled and gave a responsive nod of assent. In conclusion he remarked that this was a LIQUOR case, and that he felt rather liquorish, and that he must bring his speech to a close in order to go and take a glass of liquor; whereupon one of the jurors, set to clapping lustily with his feet. This attempt to raise an expression of popular applause throughout the court room, although not responded to by any one, was not rebuked by the presiding officer, who himself seemed to enjoy it much."

Such are the fruits of Lovejoy's murder, which Alton is beginning to reap.—Human Rights.

A Melancholly Case.—The Peoria, (Ill.) Register publishes the following extract from a letter from Alton dated July 14;

"U. F. Linder, the celebrated ex-attorney general of Illinois was arraigned before Justice Pickard on Friday last, on a charge of attempting to shoot Mr. Wm. Harned, a respectable citizen of this place, and with whom said Linder and family boarded. He was held to bail for his appearance at court in the sum of $500. He has as yet been unable to get bail, and is now sick in bed. So soon as he gets out the constable will commit him to the caboose."

In relation to the facts contained in the above extract, the editor of the Register, makes the following remarks, which are deserving of the particular attention of those who are presenting obstacles to the progress of the Temperance Reform:

"The highly prominent position which this individual has occupied before the people of this state, makes whatever relates to his moral delinquency a matter of fair newspaper comment. Nature has been most bountiful to him. For bold and original thought; for the power to hold an audience in breathless attention, and especially a jury, he has few equals. Yet all those noble faculties he is yielding up to the demon of intemperance Six months ago he commenced a reformation, and came out the high minded and eloquent advocate of the Alton petition to suppress tippling houses in that city. His friends were rejoiced, and many a broken hearted wife and mother were ready to heap blessings on his head. But their joy was destined to be short lived. The man who had made himself conspicuous in exciting and sustaining the Alton riots of last fall could not suddenly change his nature; and after a mock show of reformation, he appeared in the police courts, as the advocate of those who set the city temperance ordinance at defiance; thus repudiating the very sentiments and arguments he had a few weeks before urged in favor of its adoption. True it is that the way of sin is downhill: and the late attorney general of Illinois has fallen so low, that no one will become his appearance bail in the petty sum of 500 dollars.

Lynching in Louisiana.—The last N. Orleans papers inform us that Lee, the convict who had been sentenced to two year's imprisonment in the State Prison for brutally abusing his wife, was wrested from the officers who were taking him to prison, by a mob, at Baton Rogue on the 30th ult. "carried to a convenient spot, and shocking, punished; or in the language of the Picayune—

He was seized by those on the look out, taken to a convenient spot, and a sentence passed and carried into effect more suitable to the enormity of his offence than the one awarded by our criminal code, the framers of which never supposed human nature capable of a crime so entirely at variance with anything ever even thought of or committed by any being bearing the semblance of humanity.

It is vain to say any thing more against these savage breaches of every principle of civilized society.

It is said that all the cows in and about London could not yield one third of the milk daily used in and about the metropolis. Chalk water, &c. make up the two-thirds. This is what the boy calls milkmen's milk.

Prospects Ahead.—From almost every quarter of the country we hear of preparations being made in anticipation of an extensive fall business. Yesterday was the day for the Philadelphia and many other suspended banks to resume. In anticipation of this event money has become plenty, and every thing in the way of enterprise is improving. In New York money is also abundant, and the banks have nothing like applications enough to employ their discountable funds. The dry goods market is improving, and a brisk fall trade is confidently looked for. The stocks of the western merchants are unusually low. The people in that vast region of country must be clothed, and their exhausted stocks must be replenished. Extensive preparations are making, both by merchants and manufacturers to supply their customers at the West and South and many country dealers are already in the city purchasing their supplies.—New. Eagle.

The Jersey Blue has been again burnt out

Zinc.—We have been informed by a gentleman from Plainfield, that Mr. Noah Drake, of Warren, in the vicinity of Plainfield, has discovered on his farm a Limestone Quarry, which promises to be of great value. The stone is said to be of excellent quality, and can be easily reduced to lime which is not only fit for purposes of agriculture, but for building and the other various uses to which that article is applied. There is no other lime quarry now known, within a circuit of 30 miles from Mr. Drake's farm.—Elizabeth. Jour.

The exploration of rivers in the extreme N. and S. West is opening to the country new channels of trade. We learn by late New Orleans papers that the steamer Ronnee has ascended the Yazoo river as far as Tillatobe, in Tallahatchee county, which is 560 miles above its mouth, carrying up 300 tons of freight.

The N. Y. Gazette compliments the Mayor, for his earnest endeavors to correct the bad practices of hackmen and omnibus drivers,—racing, &c.—and warns loafers about the ferries and steamboats that he is about to send for them!—Measures have been taken to destroy the dogs.

The Baltimore grain market experienced an extraordinary rise on Saturday. Wheat went up to $1,35. Rye, 80 cents, and corn rose full 20 cents a bushel, viz. to 76 cts. Oats were worth 33 cts.—Newark Daily, 13th inst.

Corn was sold in the Baltimore market on Monday, at $1 per bushel, by the cargo. Wheat $1,50 to 1,60.—Ib. 15th inst.

The Farmers of Middlesex and Somerset counties were to have had a meeting at New Brunswick on the 16th, to form an Agricultural Society.

The Philadelphians are busy with a project of establishing a line of steam packets from that port to Liverpool, to be propelled by means of anthracite coal. This fuel has now been successfully used for 18 months past in the steam engines of that vicinity.

The three new steam ships contracted for by the Great western Steam Ship Company, to run between Cork and NewYork, in conjunction with the "British Queen," are to be called the President, Great Britain, and the United States.

A total abstinence Society has been formed in our sister County of Essex, at the head of which appropriately stands the name of Theodore Frelinghuysen—"foremost in every good work." The Ex. Committee of the Society have issued an address, which contains such powerful dissuasives from all intoxicating drinks as a beverage, that we could wish to see it in the hands of every one. We will endeavor to give our readers the benefit of it N. B. Fredonian.

A Liverpool paper has the following item, interesting to Jerseymen—

An iron vessel, constructed at the building yard of Mr. John Laird, at North Birkenhead, called the Robert F. Stockton, fitted with Ericsson's propellors, and intended as a tow boat on the Delaware and Raritan Canal, in the United States, was launched on Saturday last. All the machinery except the boiler, which will be ready in a few days was on board at the time. She will be schooner rigged; and, as soon as she is fully equipped, it is the intention of Mr. Ogden, the United States Consul at this port, under whose inspection she has been built, to try her on the Mersey. From the experiments which have been made with the twin boat, the Francis B. Ogden, on the Thames, sanguine hopes are entertained that the propellers, worked by steam, will give the boat an average speed of 8 or 7 miles an hour; and should they be found applicable to sailing vessels, they will produce an important revolution in ocean navigation.

Tornado.—The Erie (Pa.) Gazette says that that section of country was visited on the 29th ult. with one of the most destructive tornadoes since the year 1810. It commenced about two miles east of the town of Erie, and covered a space two miles in width. To what distance it extended had not been ascertained. Its course was marked by uprooted houses and barns, uprooted trees, &c. The greatest destruction of property is said to have been in Harbor creek, between the Four and Six mile creeks.

A destructive fire occurred at Hobeken lately which destroyed property to the amount of about $20,000, only 5000 of which was insured.

Tennessee Crops.—The last Nashville Whig says, "We learn from a correspondent at Belvar, Tennessee, that the corn crops in the southern counties of that district, which a few weeks ago looked so promising, have been almost ruined by the present drought. The suffering of the farmers in that section of country by heat and dry weather, are intolerable.

The Memphis Enquirer reports the cotton crop of North Mississippi as unfavorable beyond precedence. The same paper says that the Mississippi river is at its lowest stage.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, August 21, 1838.

For I have sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Wm. Pennington, Governor of this state, has issued a Proclamation, bearing date August 15th, requiring our banks to resume specie payments, within 15 days thereof, according to the law passed last winter on this subject. Most of the banks in this state have resumed already.

The Great Western left New York for Bristol, on Thursday afternoon last, with 86 cabin passengers. Her letter postage amounts to $2000.

For the last three weeks, our exchange papers have been remarkably barren of news—nothing stirring. We expect some election news next week, from Missouri, Indiana, Kentucky, and N. Carolina: which will be of very great interest, —no full returns have yet been received from any of these states.

On Friday last, a very heavy business was done at the Broker's board, N. Y. About 5000 shares changed hands, at the following prices:—United States bank 123, Phenix 106, Mechanics 105, National 117, Morris Canal 72, Equitable Ins. 100, Paterson Railroad 78, New Jersey do. 105.

Exchange on Cincinnati, 2 per cent. only.

The banks of the District of Columbia resumed specie payments on Monday of last week, at the same time the Philadelphia banks did.

We are happy to perceive that the late rains have materially benefitted the cotton and other crops in Louisiana and Alabama.

They have also done much good in this vicinity.

The fire in the vicinity of Scotch Plains is still burning with undiminished strength.

Charleston banks have agreed to resume on the 1st. September.

Six deserters from the 43d British regiment in Canada, attempted to cross the Niagara river on a raft, a few days since. Three of them were drowned, and the other three reached Lewiston in safety. The regiment has lost 40 men by desertion, since it has been stationed on the Niagara frontier.

A mad dog, pursued by a number of persons, ran up to bite a horse in the Bowery, N. Y. on Wednesday, when a sudden kick from the sagacious animal forestalled his purpose, and superseded the pursuers. The dog was killed instantly.

The N. Y. City corporation is making further experiments in wood-pavement; and is now paving the cross-paths of Broadway with blocks of wood. A satisfactory experiment has been made in Philadelphia. The chief difficulty now in the way of introducing wood is the first expense. That it is more permanent than pebbles, as well as altogether pleasanter, is we believe, conceded.

The best way to stop a horse, when he is running away with a vehicle is to jump on his back seize the check rein, and bring him quietly to.—Mr. Clark, Post master at Bridgewater, tried the experiment last week in Boston, and probably saved his life thereby.

Writing German Text with the feet is the new phrase in Boston, for describing drunken men's pieces.

A doctor in Philadelphia announces as the latest remedy for the tooth ache, the mouth must be filled with cream, then you are to bump your head against the wall till it turns to butter.

A Monster.—A charge of unpardonable inhumanity is thus brought against a schooner in reference to the Pulaski, by a pilot, who communicated it to the honored Capt. Davis of the Henry Comerford, on his last voyage.

The schr. Merchant, of Elizabeth City, N. C. bound to Wilmington N. C. with a cargo of Corn, passed the passengers on the wreck of the steamboat Pulaski, heard their desperate cries for aid, saw them struggling with the waves, when even hope had almost forsaken them, and notwithstanding he was distinctly hailed by them he refused to offer any assistance, and proceeded on his course. The reason which he afterwards assigned for this wanton and murderous neglect of duty was that he feared another vessel, bound to the same port as himself, would get in before him.

An Inland Water Spout on Long Island.—The Hempstead Inquirer relates the following, certainly a rare phenomenon:

We learn from a gentleman from Patchogue, that the inhabitants of that place were favored with the sight of a water spout from the pond near the village. It lasted about 20 minutes, was about 15 feet in diameter at the base, and rose itself in the clouds which hung above, causing them to become more and more dark in their appearance until its close. The pond was said to have been lowered about two inches.

The U. S. Schr. Grampus arrived at Pensacola on the 31st ult. from a cruise along the Mexican and Texan coasts. She left Tampico on the 23d when every thing was quiet. The Grampus had been absent for a month, and has visited and communicated at the Brazos, Vera Cruz, and Tampico. The U. S. ship Boston was waiting at Tampico for a Condubra with $380,000 in specie. The French were still Blockading the Mexican ports.

The Mexican President has communicated to his Congress the fact that an amicable arbitration has been agreed upon with the U. S. and relies with entire confidence upon our faith.

His excellency alleges the difficulty with France as the only reason for the suspension of the war on Texas. He recommends a pacific and conciliatory mode of settling with France though her demands are treated as inadmissible. The government and the country are declared to be in a tranquil, sound condition.

The Legislature of Maine, by a law of the last session have exempted from attachment the plough, cart and harrow of the farmer, and the necessary tools used by hand in agriculture.

Fire in the Pines.—A great conflagration is now sweeping through the New-Jersey Pines; and the extreme dryness of the timber fearfully augments it. It broke out, as we learn, from the Burlington Herald, in that county by the Martha Furnace tract. While on Long Beach, last week the editor saw the destroying element, at the distance of many miles, casting a light as though a city were in flames. Owners of timber lands are busily employed firing against the consuming enemy. It is the greatest calamity of the kind ever known there. From the neighborhood of Tuckerton to Burr's Mill, the country had been over run. The loss is at least $100,000. We learn from another source, that one single proprietor has lost $20,000. The fire sweeps on, in its devastating progress, in a broad column, twelve miles wide. It sports with man too, even as with the dry twigs, and consumes whole families in its course. (Princeton Whig.

Commodore Rodgers died on the 1st inst., aged 74 years.—The funeral of this gallant old officer took place on friday, in Philadelphia, with the naval ceremonies and tokens of respect. The funeral service of the Episcopal church was read by Dr. Tyng, after which the mariners fired a volley over his grave. The Philadelphia Spirit of the Times says:

"Commodore Rodgers was up to his death the head of the American Navy—the oldest commander in its service—but for the last fifteen months has been a resident of the naval asylum in this city, and the greater part of that time in close confinement, a confirmed lunatic. He was made as comfortable as his unhappy situation would permit. His was not a continued madness, but a kind of childishness, with a strong passion for destruction upon slight or imaginary provocation."

He had gradually grown weaker and weaker for several months past and died on Wednesday morning about 2 o'clock, without any particular disease, but from excessive weakness.

The Secretary of the Navy has directed that the flags of the Navy yards, stations, and vessels of the United States navy, be hoisted half mast, and thirteen minute guns be fired at noon on the day after the receipt of the order, as a mark of respect to the memory of Commodore Rodgers. The officers of the navy and marine corps are directed to wear crape for 30 days.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser acknowledges the receipt of papers from New Orleans in 11 days—2500 miles.

It is stated that the navy department has despatched to Europe an officer of the first grade in the service, and one of the most scientific in knowledge, to collect every information necessary to the equipment of Steam vessels for the navy.

So comes good out for evil. The Common Council of Hudson have determined to lay out the site of an entire block, which was destroyed by the late fire, as a public square, so that in a short time the city will be beautified and improved.

CERTIFICATE.

This is to certify that we have used a reaction water wheel invented by Mr. Wing, which gave good satisfaction and gave us a great deal more power than we need. We have now in use a Direct Inclined Reaction Water Wheel, invented by Wm. C. Bishop, which has the same advantages of the Wing Wheel, and has still as much power with one third less water than the Wing wheel. DRAKE DUNN,

POETICAL.

From Blackwood's Magazine.

Folly.

There is folly in all the world,
Or go we east or west,
A folly that vexes the old,
And keeps the young from rest.

The miser has folly enough,
For his soul is in sordid bags;
And the spendthrift's folly also
Brings him to sin and rags.

There is folly in statesmen's schemes,
For spite of their plotting and wit,
There's a wiser hand above
That leads them with bridle and bit.

There's folly in power and pride,
That makes full many to fall;
There's folly in maiden's love,
But that is the sweetest of all.

But of all the follies, the worst—
For it stings with constant smart,
The scorpion of the mind—
Is that of a thankless heart.

For the thankless heart is cursed,
And with blessings encompassed grieves,
For it cannot rejoice with the hand
That gives nor yet receives.

To be thankful makes better the good;
And if heaven sends us ill,
There is kindness in him that gives—
So let us be thankful still.

O let us be thankful in youth,
And let us be thankful in age—
And let us be thankful through life,
For there's pleasure in every stage.

Youth has its own sweet joys,
And he must be blind as a bat,
Who cannot see love's sweet smile,
And will be thankful for that.

There are friends the dearest to cheer,
Ere half our sand is run—
And affection maketh wintery days
As bright as the summer's sun.

And when from the dearest on earth,
We part, let us hope 'tis given—
And bless to be thankful for still—
To meet them again in Heaven.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Nature's Teacher.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

When I was a child, I knew an old grey-headed man. Age had given him wisdom and I loved him, for he was kind as well as wise. Once he said to me, "I know a way to be happy." "Who taught it you?" I inquired. And he answered, 'I learnt it in the fields." Then I drew near and entreated him also to teach it to me.—But he replied, "Go forth unto the fields, among the living things, and learn it for thyself."

So I went forth and looked attentively upon all that was moving around. But no voice spoke to me. Then I spoke to the grey headed man. And when he asked what hast thou seen in the fields?' I answered

"I saw the brook flowing on, among sweet flowers. It seemed to sing a merry song. I listened but there were no words to the music. The sparrow flew by me with down in her beak, wherewith to line her nest, and the red breast with a crumb she had gathered at the door to feed her chirping young. The ducklings swam beside their mother in the clear stream, and the hen drew her chickens under her wings and screamed at the soaring hawk. The spider threw out her many threads like lines of silver, and fastening them from spray to spray, ran lightly on the bridge made from her own body. The snail put his horrid head through the door of his shell, and drew it suddenly back. The ant carried a grain of corn in her pincers, and the loaded bee hastened to her hive, like a laborer to his cottage.—The dog came forth and guarded the young lambs frisking fearlessly by the side of their serious mother, who cropped the tender grass. All seemed full of happiness, I asked them how I also should be happy. But they made me no reply. Again and again I asked, "Who will teach me to be happy?" Yet nothing answered, save the echo over repeating my last words 'happy—happy," but not to tell me how to become so."

"Hast thou looked upon all these, young man said the aged, "yet received no instruction! Did not the brook tell the, that it might not stay to be idle, that it must be in haste to meet the river and go with that to the ocean, to do the bidding of the ocean's king, and that it had pleasure by the way in refreshing the trees that stretched their roots to meet it, and in giving drink to the flowers that bowed down to its face with a kiss of gratitude? Thou didst see the birds building their nests, or flying with food to their little ones and thou couldst not perceive that to make others happy is happiness? The young duck gave diligence to learn of its mother the true use of its oary feet, and how to balance its body aright in the deep water, and the chickens obeyed the warning to hide under the broad wing, though it knew not the cruelty of the foe from which it fled And did they not bid thee seek with the same obedience, the lessons of thy mother, who every day teacheth thee, and every night lifts up her prayer that thy soul may avoid the destroyer, and live forever? When the spider's silken bower was swept away, and she began another without ill temper or complaint, and the snail willingly put forth all her strength to carry her house upon her back, and the ant toiled with her load of corn to her winter storehouse, and the bee wasted not the smallest drop of sweetness that could be found, in the honey cup—come there no voice to these from their example of patience, prudence and wisdom? Thou didst admire the shepherd's dog, minding so readily the word of his master, but fail to understand that faithful continuance in duty is happiness. From all these teachers of the field came there no precept unto thee? When they all spake with different voices went they deaf to their instruction?—Each in his own language told thee that industry was happiness, and that idleness was an offence both to nature and to her God."

Then I bowed down my head, and my cheek was crimsoned with shame, because I had not understood the lesson of the fields, and was ignorant of what even birds and insects knew. But the man with hoary hairs smiled on me and comforted me. So I thanked him for the good teachings of his wisdom. And I took his precept into my heart that I might weigh it and see if it were true. But though I was then young and now old I have never had reason to doubt that industry is happiness.

Characteristic of a Sailor.—At the time of the last great earthquake in Callao—we believe it was 1823—an American brig which for some time had been lying in the harbour, was, to use the sea term, "thrown out," or in other words was carened on one side for the purpose of being repaired. Among other tools which had been borrowed from the United States sloop of war Vincennes, then at anchor there, was a hammer, which just before the first sh ck, was by accident lost overboard. The captain of the brig, who was then leaning over the quarter where he was unperceived by the sailors, overheard the following conversation between them, respecting the loss of the hammer.

"Blood, mons and pronouns! there goes the United States hammer overboard, Jack!"

"Well, what do I care," said Jack, 'I didn't lose it overboard.

"Nor did'n I," muttered the first knight of the marlingspike.

In the midst of this dispute the sea was seen to retire, while the inhabitants of the deep, stunned with the unusual turmoil of the water, rose in myriads to the surface. On shore, the spire of the church within the castle of Callao, tottered and fell, and thick volumes dust rose over the city and suburbs.

"Hallo, Jack," cried one of the sailors, what do you call that when ,tis boiled?

"Why man, it's an earthquake—see what a dust it kicked up.

"Log me! that's a good one, ejaculated the first sailor, slapping his shipmate on the back; we'll tell the Skip that the earthquake shook the hammer overboard.

Cousining.—A poor country minister lately arrived at Boston, and immediately repaired to the house of a relative. a lady who had married a merchant of that city. The parties were glad to see him, and invited him to make their house his home, (as he declared his intention of remaining in the city a day or two. The husband of the lady anxious to show attention to a relative and friend of his wife, took the gentleman's horse to a livery stable in Hanover street, and had it put up there. Finally the visit became a visitation, and the merchant, after a lapse of eleven days, found that beside lodging and boarding the gentleman, a pretty considerable bill had run up at the livery stable. Accordingly he went to the man who kept the stable, and told him when the gentleman took his horse he would pay the bill. "Very good said the stable keeper, "I understand you." Accordingly, in a short time, the country gentleman went to the stable, and ordered his horse to be got ready. The bill, of course, was presented. "Oh," said the gentleman, "Mr. so. and so, my relation will pay this." "Very good sir," said the stable keeper "please get an order from Mr.———, it will be the same as the money." The horse was put up again, and down went the country gentleman to the Long Wharf, where the merchant kept. "Well," said he, "I am going now." "Are you?" said the merchant "Well, good bye, sir." "Well, about my horse the man says the bill must be paid for his keeping." "Well, I suppose that is all right sir." "Yes, well but you know I am your wife's cousin." 'Yes' said the merchant, "I know you are, but I'm blow'd if your horse is !"

"Well, wife I've sold Ponts," said Ned Whistler one day to the dog-detesting Mrs. W.

"Have you indeed?" said she, brightening up, at the good news. "I'm dreadful glad of it. How much did you sell him for my dear?"

"Fifty dollars!"

"Fifty dollars! what fifty dollars for one dog? How glad I am! That'll almost buy us a good horse. But where's the mony, my love?"

"Money said Ned, shifting a long nine lastly to the other corner of his mouth, "I didn't get a ny money; I took two puppies, at twenty five dollars a piece!"

A young lady remarked to a fop the other day that his penknife, (which by the bye, was a very neat one,) in one respect resembled himself. The ladies in the room commenced guessing what it could be. At last, a smart looking little boy who had sat silently in one corner, was asked to guess After examining the knife pretty closely, he turned round in a cunning manner, and replied, "well I don't know, unless it's because it's so dull!"

Irish Mode of Keeping Accounts.—When a labourer can write, he keeps accounts in writing: if he can't write he keeps a tally, that is, a stick split up, one part being kept by the farmer; for every day we put a notch or stroke upon the stick: sometimes the farmer does not put a notch or stroke on his stick, and at the end when we are counting up, if the tallies don't agree, makes us go to a magistrate, and take our oath: but if there is one or two days between us, we lose the days, because we don't think it worth while to go to the magistrates about them.—Binn's Miseries and Beauties of Ireland.

What a blessing it is when a man can properly regulate his temper. How many heart burnings and animosities would it save us; how many friendships would be preserved, and what a deal of good fellowship, that is now wasted, might be consecrated and gathered together for our worldly comfort.

Monsieur la Comte, said the Secretary of Mirabeau to him one day, "the thing you require is impossible." Impossible! exclaimed Mirabeau, starting from his chair; never again use that foolish word in my presence.

The Democratic Banner is as good as ever.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Modern Languages an extra charge,	10.00

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education, In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mutual effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. These are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

The Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 400,000 citizens generally behind it, and others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back from any effort to feebly endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

Terms.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired.

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

Terms.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. S. school teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities."

We cordially recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a "goodly pearl," which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—Its well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Sudent will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

Stanzas,

Suggested by an incident in the Life of a friend.

"But ever and anon of grief subdued,
There comes some token, like a scorpion's sting,
Scarce seen, but with a bitterness embued."
Byron.

How slight a cause, will wound the heart
With such envenomed sting,
That time, with all its lethean art,
May healing never bring!
And oft we give ourselves a wound
Which thought might sure prevent;
But when reflection comes, 'tis found
Too late—but, to repent!

"'Twas mine," said one, "to early leave
The blest paternal hearth,
Where joy the purest we receive,
That ever brightens earth!—
From youthful sports to turn and scan
The page of classic lore,
And as each year its distance ran,
Grow wiser than before.

And oh! how oft "mid learning's toil,
When, with a wearied mind
I still must waste the midnight oil,'
Some deep wrought truth to find;
Do images of other days,
Come back on memory's wing!
While from the task, my vision strays
With forms, which thought doth bring.

A mother's smile of love and pride,
Comes o'er me with its beam;
A sister's step doth by me glide,
The angel of my dream!
And then, a sad remembrance, throws
Its shadow o'er the whole:
And swift the joyous vision goes,
For one that pains the soul!

'Twas when released from college walls,
I sought the parent dome;
There to respond affection's calls,
And taste the sweets of home:
But years had changes wrought in me,
And in a sister fair,
I'd left upon a mother's knee,
But found no longer there.

Now, like a lily-bud she seemed,
So pure, so pleasing sweet!
All that the absent-one, had dreamed
Of innocence complete!
She shrank from my first warm embrace,
In fear, and turned aside;
Like that frail leaf," whose every grace,
From the rude touch will hide!

Yet nature's claims, resumed their sway
Soon, o'er her gentle soul;
And to my room one luckless day,
With cautious step she stole!
It happened that my pen was bent
On some perplexing aim;
And surely 'twas ill fate, that sent
Her voice to lisp my name!

I turned impatiently—and said,
Don't trouble me, just now;
And, Heaven forgive me! from her lid
A tear of pearly glow,
Crept on the cheek, I would have kissed,
In token of my grief;
But that the lovely face was missed,
And tears my sole relief!

Distance divides us now again,
And time hath passed away;
Yet, oft with deep regret and pain,
Do I recall that day:
And though her feeling heart forgave,
And strove to hush my fear;
Yet, shall I carry to my grave,
That injured sister's tear."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Extract from a novel, just published, entitled :—"Clement Falconer; or, Memoirs of a Young Whig; by a citizen of Maryland."

"To recur to what we were first speaking of," said Clem, my sole ambition is to become a lawyer. To that one object I am resolved to devote all my energies, moral and physical. What length of time must be read to qualify me for the office ?"

"After three years close application you may be admitted," said Mr. Crabbe, "and then your studies will have just commenced. But, to be frank with you Clem, you will never make a lawyer. You have the 'parts,' but you lack the 'poverty,' and both are necessary to raise a man into the high places of the law."

"There are exceptions to every rule," said Clem, not a little disconcerted by the deliberate sentence pronounced against him, "and I hope I shall be able to prove to you that I am not to be included, as a matter of course, in any general category. I have already taken the lead of my fellows in arduous and protracted contests, and I feel that I am the same being now that I was then."

"If you are to be an exception," said Mr. Crabbe, "you will be the first in all my observation and experience. You may take the whole population of Maryland, and select from it the first men who are most distinguished for talents, or any description of public usefulness, and I will answer for it, they are all, every one of them, men who began the world without a dollar. Look into the public councils of the nation, and who are they that take the lead there? They are men who made their own fortunes—self-made men, who began with nothing. The rule is universal. It pervades our courts, State and Federal, from the highest to the lowest. It is true of all the professions. It is now; it has been so at any time since I have known the public men of the State or the nation; and it will be so while our present institutions continue. You must throw a man upon his own resources to bring him out. The struggle which is to result in eminence is too arduous, and must be continued too long to be encountered and maintained voluntarily, or unless as a matter of life and death. He who has fortune to fall back upon will soon slacken his efforts, and finally retire from the competition. With me it is a question whether it is desirable that a parent should be able to leave his son any property at all. You will have a large fortune and I am sorry for it, as it will be the spoiling of a good lawyer. These are my deliberate sentiments, and I shall be rejoiced to find, in your instance, I shall have been mistaken."

An interesting work entitled, "Evenings at Home' contains the following beautiful apologue.

A gentleman and his son were walking in a village one Sunday, as the church bells were singing. The various societies of worshippers were going to their respective houses of worship.

"Father," said the little boy, "why do not all these people worship God in the same manner?"

"And why should they agree?—They were not made to agree in this, I suppose," said the father. Just then a poor man fell down in the street in a fit. Numbers hastened to him. A Presbyterian sat down and made his lap a pillow for the sick man's head; a Baptist chafed his temples; a Roman Catholic lady held a smelling bottle to his nose; a Unitarian untied his neck-cloth, and unbuttoned his collar to let him breathe more freely; a Methodist ran for a doctor; an Episcopalian mopped the poor man's crying children; and a Quaker held his broad umbrella over him to keep off the burning sun. "Arthur," said the gentleman, pointing to the scene, "this is what men are made to agree in."

A newly invented fan.—The "Mount Vernon Watchman" relates an odd incident which happened, not long since, in Western Virginia. An old lady from the country purchased several articles in a dry goods shop, and, at last, seeing a neatly painted and varnished bellows hanging by a post, inquired the name and use of the article. The clerk told her that it was a new-fashioned fan, and regaled her with several puffs of the bellows in her face, at which she expressed her satisfaction and purchased the new invention. The Mount Vernon print thus proceeds with the story —"On the next day, our informant, the minister had an appointment to preach in a school-house in a neighboring county. The congregation being assembled, while the minister was in the act of reading the hymn, who should pop in but the old woman with her new fashioned fan, and having taken her seat, immediately commenced puffing away in good earnest. The congregation knew not what to make of it; some smiled and some looked astonished; but the ludicrous prevailed over everything else, and to such an extent that the minister himself was obliged to stop reading and to hand the book to his brother in the desk. After the usual preliminary services, he rose to preach; but there sat conspicuously the old lady, with the bellows in front, a hand hold of each handle, the nose turned up to her face, and with much self complacency, puffing the gentle breeze into her face. What to do or how to proceed he knew not; for he could not shut his eyes over the congregation without meeting with the old lady. At length summoning resolution and trying to feel the solemnity of the duty imposed upon him, he proceeded. He finished his discourse, but it cost him more effort than any before or since."

Chinese Pomposity.—The following is the literal copy of an invitation, from a Chinese of consequence to a foreigner, inviting him to a marriage feast. It is contained in a Canton paper.

"To the great head of literature, vessel the first born, at his table of study. On the eighth day of the present moon, your younger brother is to be married. On the ninth, having cleansed the cups, on the tenth he will pour out wine, on which day he will presume to draw to his lowly abode the carriage of his friend. With him he will enjoy the pleasures of conversation, and receive from him instruction for the well regulation of the feast. We humbly solicits the brilliant presence of his elder brother; and the elevation to which the influence of his glory will assist him to rise, who can conceive?"

Cigar-race.—This variety of sporting may be new to some of our readers. The conditions are, that the rider starts with a lighted cigar in his mouth, continues to smoke it during the race, and comes in with it lighted; much of course, depends on the goodness of the cigar, but still more the tact of the smoker. If he does not ride fast enough he loses the race that way; if he rides too fast, he may either blow it out, or cause it to burn so fiercely that it will be entirely consumed before he reaches the winning post. The fastest cigar-race on record was ran in December last, at Kingston, Jamaica; mile heats. Time, the first heat, two minutes ten seconds, the second heat two minutes, twelve seconds. Climate and other circumstances considered, it must, in every sense of the expression, have been a smoking race.

Destruction of the New York Bastile.—"What is all this?" we exclaimed the other morning, as, walking up Broadway, a cloud of dust and mortar swept aeros our path. An old gentleman at our side heard the interrogatory, and replied, Look there—never mind your eyes—'s'ot that a delightful spectacle?" "Ha! so they are tearing down old Bridewell. How the mortar flies! Well, it has been a disgrace to the city long enough."—"You may well say that. It is not strange that we should so long have suffered our principal thoroughfare to be frowned upon, under the sunshine and blue sky, by such an ugly, detestable, villanous, black old pile?"—"What! you were never confined there?" we asked, surprised at the fervour manifested by our companion. "No, sir," replied the veteran with dignity: but the wretched old structure has been an eyesore to me from my boyhood. The shout of youthful gaiety would be checked half uttered from my lips, as I caught a glimpse of its grated windows. To my imagination, it was a sort of living charnel-house—and it struck my heart with a chill colder than any I ever experienced on entering the receptacle of the dead; for upon inanimate mortality I could look without a shudder—but a living fellow creature, buried in the midst of life—by a refinement of cruelty concentrated within view of the bustle and business of a great city—soiled by the very dust of the arena, and chafing with its excitement—but withheld from entering it—such an object seemed to me to be compelled to undergo a torment worse than that of Tantalus. But look!—there goes the eastern wall! Crash! Hurra!" A cloud of dust from the falling debris drove us across the street—but, turning, we saw our old Knickerbocker friend clapping his hands and dancing about among the mortar until his black cocked hat was as white as the hairs it covered.—Mirror.

Hints to Young People.—No. 10.

Reverence Yourselves.—There is nothing of which men know so little as themselves. They understand far more of the surrounding creation, of all matter, and its laws than of their own minds the character of their thoughts and feelings, the changes of which that spiritual principle within them undergoes, as they pass from scene to scene through the vicissitudes of their lives.

But little as men know of themselves, they practice less upon what they do know. They do not endeavor to regulate their thoughts, by the known laws of thought; nor to control their feelings by the laws of feeling. The minds of most men are like rude machines, put loosely together, and driven by accidental impulses, as it were without rule and without direction.

There are two classes of characteristics of human nature, which are equally important as articles of knowledge. One consists of those high qualities which place man in the rank of intelligent and moral beings; which constitute the image of God, in his nature, and mark him as intended for a sublime and glorious destiny. The other embraces those properties of an animal nature, the material body, the appetites and instincts, which connect him with an earthly and temporal sphere, and make him alive to the experience of the lower orders of being.

The first of these classes of characteristics, may well make every reflecting man an object of reverence to himself.—Could we see one of our fellow men, divested of all that is mortal and corporeal, and of all the properties of his nature which designate him for an earthly and temporal state of existence, and standing before us, an unveiled spirit of pure intelligence, virtue and immortality, the first impression would be that of solemn reverence. Such my young friends, are you. Ask yourself this question. What am I? and the answer to this question will awaken a thrill of solemnity within you; your thoughts will turn upon that immortal spirit which we speak of as dwelling within you, but which may far more properly be said to constitute yourself. You will call to mind the fact that reason and conscience are sublime faculties, which exalt you above the mere animal kingdom, and place you in the rank of intelligence and moral character. These faculties are too valuable to be trifled with. They are high endowments. They confer on every man the dignity of nature which belongs to angels. They give him a share in the same sort of enjoyments afforded to the higher orders of being. They render him capable of improvement in those excellencies which adorn the divine nature, and raise him in the society, and the likeness of those by any thing in the world which should awaken a lively and rational reverence in our minds, it is the inherent mysterious greatness of our intelligent and moral nature.

I do not now inculcate the respect and reverence which are due from one man to another. I call on you, my young friends, to reverence this nature in yourself. Remember that you have such a nature as would, if seen in its full greatness in another person, call forth your involuntary homage. It does awaken your reverence in some cases. Do you admire and venerate the great? Yet examine the greatest man that ever lived, and what faculties, either intellectual or moral, has he, which you have not. His greatness is human nature developed; the same nature with your own. Why then should you reverence any human being more than yourself. Think often of yourself as a rational, accountable, and high and solemn destiny, and you will avoid many of the errors and vices into which you might otherwise fall.

When I see a young person wasting his time in vanity, indulging a taste for those idle sports which are so common and so popular among young people and spending time and money and youthful vivacity and vigor, in amusements that dissipate seriousness and manliness, and make an intelligent and moral youth appear like a little child, whose time is beguiled by mere diversion, I judge that the young person has no reverence for himself. He does not consider what an insult he offers to his own understanding: and how ill he would bear to be treated by others with the levity which he treats himself.

You would receive it as a great indignity to your years and good sense, if every older person should address you in the simple, silly, and broken style of baby talk, as though that were the only sort of conversation by which you could be entertained. Why, then, do you try to entertain yourselves with those amusements which have no more sense nor dignity than the nonsensical chatter of children. Reverence yourself. Seek those amusements which accord with the dignity of your intelligent and moral nature, and never insult and degrade yourself by such mockery to your understanding, as you would not endure from others.

CHARLES CRAYON.

From a London Paper.

Last Monday night, a truly singular display of natural capabilities took place at the Argyle Rooms, in Regent street. The Rabbi Hersh Zhanemark, a professor of hebrew and Rabbinical literature, from Stuchtin in Poland, appeared on a small platform before an auditory, apparently very familiar with the Hebrew language and literature. He was accompanied by Professor Breslau an interpreter, who stated the Rabbi's willingness to recite any portion of the Talmud which might be demanded by any one amongst his auditory, who would merely state the number of the page and line at which he wished him to commence.

The Rabbi is a middle sized man, rather slender, with a sallow drooping cast of countenance, terminated by a small snarp beard. His eye is dark and little seen, but always quick and confident; his forehead retreating, and his head particularly high in the regions of veneration, firmness, self-esteem, and love of approbation. The perceptive organs are well developed; order is particularly full but number is moderate, and stranger still, the position of the eyes affords no indication of any remarkable fullness of language His coal black hair was nearly covered by a velvet cap. One nicely curled lock fell down on each side, and served as a substitute for whiskers.

He declares himself to be 24 years old but he looks 28 or 30. He wore a silk palisse, or surplice, which reached to his feet, fastened round his waist by a gold wrought girdle. He replied to the questions put by numbers of his auditory, in a loud, confident voice, walking to and fro on his little stage, often stopping to command silence amongst his noisy audience, and continuing to chaunt his question with rapidity which his rival professors, who undertook the task of reading, seemed scarcely able to keep pace with. His rough pronunciation and voluble delivery more resembled the continuous outpouring of waters which had burst their bounds than any thing we ever heard.

It would be endless to detail the queries and replies that occurred during the examination of an hour and a half and which fully satisfied all present that he had the seven volumes folio of the Talmud (notes, texts, and commentary) by heart, which he went through consecutively, but in any order; that he knew the contents of every line taken numerically on every page, and, in short, knew the place of every word, in every line, in every one of its seven thousand pages! This proof was that he permitted any body to stick a pin through any number of leaves, and then freely and unerringly told the word punctued on any given page!

The books used in this examination were the various editions of the Talmud, of the Berlin, Frankfort edition, supplied by an individual present desirous of testing his powers; but the Rabbi declared his willingness to answer questions according to any edition that any body might present to him. He professes to know thus by rote the Mishava also: in short 8,000 pages of Hebrew, which he can repeat in any quantity, and commencing in any place that any body pleases.

But perhaps a more singular capability than even this extraordinary power of memory was the following: In a subsequent illustration of the Rabbi's powers. He requested any person merely to insert his fingers into one of the thick volumes of the Talmud, and several times astonished his assistants by informing them what words were touched by their fingers in those blind and random sortes Talmudiana.

The writer of this notice made one amongst these essayists, and observed that the Rabbi also inserted his fingers, and then carefully, though quickly, the original commentaries adjacent to the edge of the leaf and then boldly pronounced the number of the page on the passage thus hit up on! No sense but that of touch (that we are aware of) could have possibly aided in his divination of these still unopen pages! Several of the spectators (who certainly did not look beneath the surface) exclaimed in astonishment at his surprising powers of sight, in being able to count the lines in a page, of hand written books were obliged to resort to contest with the satisfaction displayed by the erudite individuals who had taken a most active part in the examination of the Rabbi, amongst whom were Professors Breslau, and Sampson, Mr. Leo, reader to the western Synagogue, and Mr. Diudenthal, Secretary to the new Synagogue.

The Boston Daily Advertiser relates the following interesting experiment, lately undertaken, and with complete success, in the waters of the Thames, not far from its mouth. It was desired to dislodge the hull of a large vessel which was fixed in the bed of the river, and which obstructed the navigation like an immoveable rock. All efforts to start it had failed, till an officer of engineers proposed the plan of filling two enormous cylinders of lead with gunpowder, and placing them, by means of the diving bell, under the sides of the embedded vessel, and exploding them. A tube communicated at one end with the cylinders, and contained a fuse to be lighted at the other.

Two attempts to put this design in execution failed, by a derangement of the apparatus, and one sailor lost his life by an entanglement in the cords of the diving bell, which was constantly agitated and displaced by the motion of the water. But at last, the preparations being all completed, 4,000 lbs of powder, with which the cylinders were filled was ignited in the bed of the river, to throw up to the surface the remnants of the wreck. A mass of water, taking the form of a dome, of more than eight hundred feet in circumference, was urged into the air to the height of seventy feet then a thick and black vapor broke forth, from the midst of which as from a volcano, escaped in every direction, masts, and planks and beams. The silence of astonishment which had seized upon the immense crowd upon each side of the river was soon broken by vehement applause, and but a few minutes after the explosion, boats approached to collect the fragments of the ship which were scattered upon the surface. No unfortunate accident interrupted the hazardous undertaking.

From the Temperance Reporter.

We ask Special attention to this article.

Simultaneous Temperance Report.

We have had a suggestion made to us, which, as it meets our approbation, we recommend to our readers. It is this, "let a day be appointed as early as convenient, for a simultaneous effort in the temperance cause throughout New Jersey." In recommending this measure, we merely hint at what may be done for the furtherance of this glorious work.—

1. In those counties where no county organization exists, or where it is defective in its arrangements, let an effort be made to secure an efficient organization, by the appointment of delegates from each local society, who will pledge themselves to attend a county meeting at a time specified, for this object. Where these societies are in existence let the local societies resolve to increase their efficiency by early and full reports of their own condition, and of the success of temperance within their respective limits. Such a course will result in great good, and the making these important arrangements will occupy but a small amount of time and attention, compared with their beneficial results.

2. By addresses and otherwise let a special effort be made to increase the numbers and efficiency of the local societies. By a proper effort multitudes may be thus brought in one day under the influence of temperance principles.

3. In view of the monstrous evils of the license system, let an effort be made to put an end to this iniquitous system by enlisting the feelings of the community against it, and let a memorial to the legislature be presented for the signature of all who may attend the meetings; and as numbers will not be present let an efficient committee be appointed, who will see that every individual in their districts has an opportunity to petition that the work of death may cease.

4. As our cause is to be sustained by the press, let an effort be made to give a large circulation to our state temperance paper. In every society a subscription may be obtained without difficulty, which will give strength, and the aggregate will ensure permanency to our periodical.

5 Let the friends of Temperance contribute on that day towards the support of the agency which is in operation to sustain the cause. Let all feel that in this work, as in every other, there is a necessity for some little expenditure; but while they are willing to spend let them be sure that there is no distribution they make which will not certainly be saved to them, as that which goes to propagate sound temperance principle and practice. They may therefore, be liberal.

6. Let the secretary of each society be instructed to forward to the executive committee of the State Temperance Society, an account of the proceedings of the day, and the results; to mention particularly the number of members, the name of the society, and the number, the number of papers taken, the amount contributed for agency, and a general view of the effect of temperance effort, in their community, so far as it can be ascertained.

We throw out these hints, with the hope that an effort will be made in accordance with them, which will result in the triumph of temperance in our state. We are persuaded that if the question could be fairly tested, a majority of the citizens of New Jersey, (leaving out the distillers and venders of strong drink and the actual drunkards, who we think are disqualified by interest and appetite from giving an opinion,) are now ready to ask for, and rejoice in, an entire demolition of the whole license system. They are ready to take place beside Massachusetts and Tennessee, and to drive out the monster who has been so long preying upon the peace and comfort of those they love. It wants but the effort. Let it be made then resolutely and prayerfully, and we shall triumph.

We recommend the first Tuesday in October, 1838, as the day for these meetings, and we do hope that every society in the state will adopt measures, to make it a day of victory.

Editors of newspapers throughout the state, friendly to Temperance, will do us a favor, and do good, by giving the above an insertion.

Living without Brains.—As the late professor H—— was walking near Edinburgh, he met one of those beings usually called fools. "Pray," said the professor, accosting him, "how long can a person live without brains?" "I dinna ken," replied the fellow scratching his head; "how long have you lived yourself, sir?"

Pittsburgh, which half a century ago had no place of worship, has now fourteen churches, 4 banks, manufactories innumerable, a theatre, and at the lowest computation, a population of 25,000

It is a remarkable fact, that while all the tributaries of the upper Mississippi, such as the St. Croix, St. Peters, Fever, Rock, &c. are swollen to an extent that excites wonder, the main stream above their mouths is comparatively low. A great deal of remark is elicited by the rise of the waters, and that of all the great lakes. It seems to be generally believed, that the rivers opening into the Arctic ocean and Hudson's bay have been choked up, and are now pouring their contents into the great reservoirs of our inland seas.

Great Feat in Swimming.—One of the soldiers of the 82d regiment, at Malden, U. C. deserted to the American side by swimming from that place to Grosse Isle, a distance of 3 miles. He was pursued to Grosse Isle by an officer and guard, but was protected by American citizens.

Reply of a colored waiter, of whom we inquired why he had not brought us a certain dish for which we had previously asked:

"Why, my dear sir, we use strenuous efforts on these yar occasions to fulfil the requisitions made upon us; but the extreme pressure of our various duties renders a simultaneous attention to every body almost impossible from the nature of things."—Newark Daily.

The Old Town bank in Orono, Me. has failed.

Fire at Scotch Plains.—We learn that Messrs. Wm. Darby and Ezra Miller owners of the land where the fire has been raging in the ground in the vicinity of the plains, have ditched around a bout 12 acres, which will prevent the further progress of the fire, and that they have commenced carting off the ashes, immense quantities of which have been made, the fire having penetrated into the ground from 1 to 4 feet.—There are now at least eight teams employed, and our informant is of opinion that if they were kept constantly at work for the space of a year, all the ashes could not be removed. The land as before stated, being filled with roots, of bushes and trees, with an occasional swamp, was not very valuable. The result will therefore prove highly advantageous to the owners, the ashes being very valuable as a manure.—N. J. Jour.

There are in Texas 20 Methodist societies, and 320 preachers, including 6 elders, and 8 exhorters. One of their missionaries—the Rev. R. The Portland Courier states, that hay is selling on the Kennebeck at five and six dollars a ton. There has been no drought in Maine during the season.

Sam Slick's opinion of Geology.—The shrewd clock-maker says, "I never heard of 'secondary formations,' without pleasure,—that's a fact.—The ladies, you know, are the secondary formation, for they were formed arter man,—and as for trap, if they an't up to that it's a pity."

On the 18th of August, there were in the N. Y. State prison at Singsing, 789 men and 28 women—total 817. During the month ending as above, there were 7 pardoned, 13 discharged whose time had expired, and one died

Exceedingly Neat.—There was a specimen of the ready politeness of Frenchmen, on board the Hercule, during the recent fete, while that ship lay at Newport, which is worth recording. One of the American guests gave as a toast,—"The three days of July," referring of course to the revolution which placed Louis Philippe on the throne. An officer of the ship immediately gave,—"And the Fourth." A happier instance of impromptu politeness never occurred.

Whig State Convention.

Delegates to the Whig State Convention, for the purpose of selecting a ticket to be supported by the whigs, for members to the next Congress at the election on the 9th and 10th days of October next, will meet at the State House in Trenton, on Wednesday, the 5th of September next, at 10 A. M.

Improvements of the age.—In perusing the August number of the Journal of the American Institute, just received, we were most agreeably struck with surprise,—aye, with astonishment,—at the many incontestible evidences we there read of the vast improvements now making in enlightened society. We will give our readers a rapid sketch of a few of the things we saw in this one number, showing with what rapid strides man is advancing in knowledge and civilization.

We saw first an account of the trial of the new steamer Rainbew, on the river Thames, selected from the London papers. The Rainbow is 212 feet long, with 180 horse power engines, made entirely of iron; very fleet, and light and elegant in appearance On the first trial she ran ahead of every steamer on the river, both with and against the tide, running about 20 miles an hour,—and this without the sacrifice of beauty or solidity of construction. The Rainbow is also one of the safest of steamers; being of iron, she cannot burn; and is divided into five water tight compartments, so that she cannot be sunk, for if by chance a hole should be broken in her bottom, the water can only fill that compartment, and the other four compartments would still keep her afloat.—What would our grandsires have said to boats made of iron, that could not be sunk, propelled by steam, at the rate of 20 miles an hour!

The next invention we saw, which promises to do much for the interests of society was the "steam plough," which is now about being patented, and is thought will be of incalculable benefit to the farming interests. The engine will be of about 12 horse power, and will move several ploughs at the same time, one after the other, ploughing about 25 acres a day, at a small expense of fuel. Of the practicability of it, Mr. J. F. Schermerhorn, a very respectable farmer, thus writes:—"Of the complete success of this steam-plough, I can have no doubt, after seeing a man, by turning a crank, move a plough, six inches deep, through a stiff, dry, clay sod. If one man can do this, certainly steam enough can be applied, to turn this crank, and move half a-dozen ploughs, at a velocity as great as the work can be well done. Until now, I have despaired of ever seeing a steam-plough so constructed, as to convert it to any practical purpose, for common farming operations; but I am confident that this will succeed." The engine can also be used for much of the hard labor on a farm, such as banking, ditching, and turning all kinds of machinery. At the west, where labor is high, this invention will be of the greatest benefit.

We next saw a project for raising flax extensively in all the northern states, on account of a new invention for preparing it so that it can be wove like cotton, and at the same expense. If the project succeeds, and it looks extremely probable, linen can be produced at a much lower rate than now, and a most profitable employment afforded to thousands of agriculturists and manufacturers, which will compete with the cotton of the southern states.

We also saw that a company has been chartered in England, for the navigation of a large river in South America, whose object it is to take the commodities of England by steam craft to the very doors of the inhabitants of the rich and populous districts in the heart of the Brazils, through regions yet uncivilized, where the savage Indian roams. Iron boats are already gone out, with mills and machinery, and an iron steamer of 300 tons is building, with which to commence the trade there. The banks are to receive settlers, by whom industry, civilization and religion will be propagated, where rich tropical productions spring up, fade, and fall, because there are none to gather.' The mighty rivers of Hindostan are also to be covered forthwith with steamboats flying from one extremity to the other of one of the most populous nations of the earth, carrying civilization to its half-civilized inhabitants, and reaping a rich harvest for the enterprising projectors.

Among many other things we saw that the long sought for machinery, a rotary steam-engine, has been invented by R. M. Sherman, of Connecticut. A steam engine of this form requires much less expense, weight, room, and fuel, than the common one, and has for a long time been considered an impracticable thing.—but there is now much reason to hope that the efforts of Mr. Sherman will be successful.

We saw much beside to interest and surprise us in this valuable journal, but enough has already beer said to show what mighty energies are at work in this age, to improve and enlighten the world.

Agreeably to previous notice, the Democratic State Convention, to nominate Congressional candidates, was held in Trenton, on Wednesday last. It was numerous and respectable, comprising about 450 delegates from every county in the state. The Hon. Thomas G. Haight, of Monmouth county, speaker of the last Jackson Legislature, was president. Perfect harmony and unanimity charterised all the proceedings,—and not a dissenting voice was raised to any part of the ticket. The Newark Daily says the nominations are as good as could have been made by the party, in present circumstances. The following is the ticket selected,—all Sub-treasury men.

Philemon Dickerson, of Passaic county,
Rev. Manning Force, of Morris,
Peter D. Vroom, of Somerset,
Daniel B. Ryall, of Monmouth,
William R. Cooper, of Gloucester,
Joseph Kille, of Salem.

Messrs. Dickerson, Vroom, and Ryall are lawyers, Mr. Force is a presiding elder in the Methodist church, a clergyman of much influence, Mr. Cooper is a plain citizen, and Mr. Kille, a county clerk.

The party are pretty confident of success, not more so however than the whigs. The question before the people is, Sub-Treasury or a National bank, which they must decide at the ballot-box.

From England.

The packet ship Mediator arrived at New-York on Tuesday last, bringing intelligence one day later than that brought by the Great Western. Among the passengers is Mr. Richard Rush, who brings with him the avails of the Smithson bequest, in gold, amounting to half a million.

A whig paper called "The Thorn," has been just commenced at Princeton, to be continued until our state election is over, at 25 cents for the whole time of its publication.

On the other side, the Emporium is to be issued three times a week, for the same period. Hot times about these days, but it concerns us not.

Fair.—The eleventh annual fair of the American Institute will be opened to visiters on Monday, October 16th, at Niblo's Garden, No. 576 Broadway, New York. Articles intended for competition for premium must be delivered on Friday and Saturday previous. Productions from every department of industry; whether of agriculture, manufactures, or the arts, as well as all kinds of machines, models, &c. will be appropriate for exhibition. A steam engine will be provided for the continual motion of the machinery. In the last two fairs, sixty gold medals, and two hundred and sixty silver medals, besides diplomas and rewards in money, were bestowed upon the exhibitors. The managers invite the attendance of the public.

We learn from the Norfolk Beacon that the long-talked of Exploring Expedition got to sea from Hampton Roads, on Saturday night, Aug. 18th. The object of the Expedition is to explore the unknown regions of the Southern Frozen Ocean, and is sent out by the United States. The squadron consists of six vessels, viz:—Sloop of War, Vincennes; ship Relief; sloop of War, Peacock; brig Porpoise; and schooners, Flying Fish, and Sea Gull. Lieut. Wilkes is commander of the squadron. May success go with them.

We stated a few weeks since that a valuable limestone quarry had been discovered in our vicinity. We now learn that another has been discovered on the farm of Maxwell Frazee, and also on the lands of Sheriff Osborn, both being in the vicinity of that first discovered.

☞ New Jersey Rail Road—New Arrangement.—The cars on the N. J. Rail Road will hereafter leave New York at 9 o'clock, A. M. and 4 P. M. Leave New Brunswick at 7 o'clock A. M. and 2 P. M. For further particulars, see advertisement on this page.

This week and last we have published large extracts from Foster's Essay on Decision of character, and shall probably continue them from time to time as we can spare room. We do this because we consider this essay as one of the most valuable publications extant. Young men would do well to study it carefully and frequently—it will materially aid in forming that most desirable quality of mind, of which it treats.

The Democrats of Monmouth county, formed the following ticket, at Freehold on the 25th inst.

Benjamin Oliphant, for Council.

Thomas E. Combe, Garret Hiers, James Craig, Wm P. Forman, for Assembly.
Abraham G. Nafie, for Sheriff.

Counterfeit American half dollars, Mexican dollars, and five franc pieces are in circulation in New York.

Semi-Savages.—The Bridgeton (N. J.) Chronicle, gives an account of a den of semi-savages in that vicinity. They were three in number—two males and one female. One of the men recently died suddenly at the well, in the act of drawing water—the other is wild, and had for twenty years been running at large in the woods, stark naked. The female is helpless. Since the death of one, the township authorities have taken the care of the others—catching and clothing the wild man. He was thinly covered with hair, somewhat resembling the coat of a very old opposum and stoutly resisting every attempt to clothe him and for several days refused to eat any thing. We quote from the Chronicle;

On examining their miserable abode which was scarcely fit for decent swine to live in, there was found in an old chest, almost without lid or lock, TWPLVE HUNDRED DOLLARS in SPECIE, two hundred in good bank paper besides a quantity of bank notes converted into mice nests, which were so effectually destroyed as not to be able to estimate their denominations or value, and several small sums of money have since been found on the premises, and doubtless more remains hidden that will never be discovered. Since the suspension of specie payments they have sold nothing, having an utter abhorrence to shin plasters!! The cattle and hogs on the farm have been two or three times fattened on the corn that was found several bushels of wheat nearly destroyed by rats which were numerous and so venomous as almost to dispute the possession with the owners! Their property will probably amount to six or seven thousand dollars, and the only grief manifested by the survivors was, that their money was to be taken from them

Manchester., Miss, July 28.

Fatal Disease among Animals.—Within the last 2 weeks a disease has prevailed among the stock on Silver Creek, in Washington County, which has swept off nearly every horse, mule, cow, and hog in the neighborhood. The Creek is settled by extensive planters, who require large numbers of horses, oxen, &c. to cultivate their plantations, and we learn that on Major, Woolfolk's plantation, out of 21 horses. 16 have died in the last few days. Mr. J. J. Hughes lost 12 out of 15, and other stock in proportion.—The disease makes its appearance on the breast of the animal, nearly between the forelegs, commencing with a slight swelling, extending finally to the throat, and generally proves fatal in about 10 hours. No cause can be assigned for this singular complaint, as it attacks animals in good order that are regularly fed and eat nothing but such seed as is given them, indiscriminately with those that are running at large.

The disease always making its appearance on the same part of the animal, seems to preclude the belief that it can be from any poisonous insect Numbers of deer are found dead in the neighboring wood, affected from appearances in the same manner. The complaint seems to be confined to hoofed animals, as the dogs have fattened on the carcasses without being affected.

We have not heard of any complaints of the kind except in Washington county, bordering on Silver and Deer Creeks.

The Crops are very fine and the families perfectly healthy.

Peoria, Ill. Aug. 11.—Our River.—The larger boats have been compelled to lay up by reason of low water, giving those of lighter draught all the business. As two or three will now have the trade in their own hands, can they not time their arrival and departures, precisely so that persons in the interior, wishing to descend the river, may know just when to reach here?

Our Market.—We saw new flour yesterday selling from waggons at $3 50 per 100 lbs. As more comes in, it will probably fall to $3 before which we hope not to see it. This is a good living price to the farmer, and one which every consumer in this western country can afford to give.

Potatoes are abundant, full grown, at 62½ cts; the price next week will probably be 50.

Other vegetables are at corresponding rates.

Butter is 15 to 18 cts; beef 5 to 6.

☞ The toscin has sounded. Already from camp to camp and the busy note of preparation is heard, and steed meets steed, with a pretty considerable snorting. "I will have the forfeit of my Bond," says a political Shylock—and "bear it not Duncan, for is a kneil, must summon, &c. cries a political macbeth. The fact is, things are at opposites: and the "neutrals," who stand aloof, pray God speed to the righteous in the political race.—Rahway Herald.

Potatoes vs. Peaches.—These two kinds of sauce are now at the same price in our market, though the range of the latter is perhaps rather widest, say from 75 to 125 cents per basket of a pominal bushel, but an actual three pecks. We can supply our Eastern and Northern friends with any quantity and we will swap even for good potatoes, and be glad of the chance. Melons plums, and fruits of all sorts, ecumnon at this season, are very abundant in our market.—Journ. of Com.

Advice to a Young Member of Parliament.—Attend to business (said Mr. Wilderforce, late in life, to a friend on entering the House of Commons,) and do not seek occasions of display; if you have a turn for speaking, the proper time will come. Let speaking take care of itself. I never go out of the way to speak, but make myself acquainted with the business, and then, if the debate pass my door, I step out and join it.

Mr. Senator Wall lost his carriage and horses in the Delaware at Burlington, the other day: and the driver lost his life, by driving into deep water.

The schooner Liberty at New Orleans from Havadon, Aug. 13th reports that about 400 arrests of insurrectionists have been made in that city, and it was thought a good many more would take place. Slave vessels were arriving every week from Africa with from 3 to 5 hundred slaves each.

The resumption of specie payments by the banks of Ohio, took place simultaneously on the 13th ult. and was done without any unusual demand for coin. On the contrary, in various towns, the deposites of specie since the resumption have been larger than the calls for it.

Upwards of forty thousands of Maple sugar, worth 5 or 6,000 dollars, have been manufactured in the neighboring town of Acworth the present year. At this rate the culture of the maple will be quite as profitable as that of the mulberry trees.—Claremont Ohio Eagle.

A project has been started for a Rail Road from New Orleans to the gulf of Mexico and Lake Borgne, in order to counteract the disadvantages attendant on the water approaches to that city from the ocean. Besides the other promised advantages, it is said that the entire commerce of Mobile, all of which is now carried on by lake navigation, will then be conducted through the medium of the Gulf railroad. The Bee says—

The gulf railroad will begin at the foot of Good Children street in the 3d municipality. The state which liberalises with just and commendable zeal all useful projects, has already subscribed $200,000 towards its completion. Individual subscriptions have been received to the amount of $260,000 more, and but a small sum is needed to enable the company to commence operations.

Florida, it is declared by Robert Butler, a candidate for Congress at Tallahassee, lacks 9000 of the constitutional number of people to entitle it to become a State.

It is stated in a Missouri paper that that State will at the next census have a prpulation of at least half a million.

In Halifax county, North Carolina, the whigs lost their candidate by one vote; and in Clark county, Missouri, they lost their candidates by two votes.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

This caution comes from a qualified judge and is entitled to consideration.—Ed.

Mr. Editor:—I wish to caution the public at this season particularly against taking active cathartic medicines, as I am confident, quite a number of cases of dysentery have been occasioned within the last week, by Brandreth's Pills. A word to the wise is sufficient. EXPERIENCE.

Since the opening of the Susquehannah Railroad, the city of Baltimore and the borough of York, says the American, have been brought within less than four hours travel of each other; and besides this great saving of time, the charge for this rapid, easy, and comfortable conveyance is only $1,75.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS.

Cornelius Bosie, Esq. $10,00; James Thorn, hatter, 4,00; James Chalmers, 1,33.

☞ Of the above $15,33 only sixty-six cents were in cash! As it is impossible for us to pay out ten or twelve dollars per week, from sixty-six cents, we hope all those indebted to us will pay us what they conveniently can, immediatly. We stand much in need of it.

MARRIED.

Bound Brook Lumber Yard

THE Subscribers respectfully inform their friends and the public, that they have taken the Lumber Yard, formerly occupied by Fish, Cook, & Co. where they have on hand, and intend keeping a general assortment of all kinds of Lumber, viz:

WHITE PINE AND HEMLOCK LUMBER,

Also, White Pine and Cypress Shingles, Plastering and Shingling lath,

All of which they offer to the Public, at the lowest Market prices.

The Subscribers would mention that the establishment at Boundbrook is connected with their yards at Trenton, where they have a large amount of White Pine and Hemlock, to the amount of three millions feet, from whence they can send at a very short notice, any kind of Lumber to the yard in Bound brook. They also have in successful operation in Trenton, two Saw mills, which, with a heavy stock of Logs, will enable them to furnish any kind or sized lumber; and they will be happy to receive orders for bills which they can furnish at short notice.

Further Extracts from Foster's Essay on Decision of Character.

It is inevitable that the regulation of every man's plan must greatly depend on the course of events, which come in an order not to be foreseen or prevented. But even in accommodating the plans of conduct to the train of events, the difference between two men may be no less than that in the same instance the man is subservient to the events, and in the other the events are made subservient to the man. Some men seem to have been taken along by a succession of events, and, as it were, handed forward in quiet passiveness from one to another, without any determined principle in their own characters, by which they could constrain those events to serve a design formed antecedently to them, or apparently in defiance of them. The events seized them as a neutral material, not they the events. Others, advancing through life with an internal invincible determination of mind, have seemed to make the train of circumstances, whatever they were, conduce as much to their chief design as if they had taken place on purpose. It is wonderful how even the apparent casualties of life seem to bow to a spirit that will not bow to them, and yield to assist a design, after having in vain attempted to frustrate it.

You may have seen such examples, though they are comparatively not numerous. You may have seen a man of this strong character in a state of indecision concerning some affair in which it was requisite for him to determine, because it was requisite for him to act. But in this case his manner would assure you that he would not remain long undecided; you would wonder if you found him still at a loss the next day. If he explained his thoughts, you would perceive that this irresolution, evidently at each effort approaching nearer to the result, must certainly reach it ere long. The deliberation of such a mind is a very different thing from the fluctuation of the other. To know how to obtain a determination is one of the first symptoms of a rationally decisive character.

When the decision was formed and the purpose fixed, you would feel an entire assurance that something would absolutely be done. It is characteristic of such a mind, to think for effect and the pleasure of escaping from temporary doubt gives an additional impulse to the force with which it is carried into action. Such a man will not re-examine his conclusions with endless repetition, and he will not be delayed long by consulting other persons, after he has ceased to consult himself. He cannot bear to sit still among unexecuted decisions and unattempted projects. We wait to hear of his achievements, and are confident we shall not wait long. The possibility or the means may not be obvious, to us but we know that every thing will be attempted, and that such a mind is like a river, which, in whatever manner it is obstructed, will make its way somewhere. It must have cost Caesar many anxious hours of deliberation, before he decided to pass the Rubicon: but it is probable he suffered but few to elapse after his decision before he did pass it. And he who should have told Caesar, before apprized of this determination, and understood his character, would have smiled contemptuously to hear it insinuated that though Caesar had resolved, Caesar would not dare; or that though he might cross the Rubicon, whose opposite bank presented to him no hostile legions, he might come to other rivers, which he would not cross; or that other rivers, or any other obstacles, would deter him from prosecuting the determination from this ominous commencement to its very last consequence.

One signal advantage possessed by a mind of this character is, that its passions are not wasted. The whole measure of passion of which any mind with important transactions before it, is capable, is not more than enough to supply interest and energy to its practical exertions; and therefore as little as possible of this sacred fire should be expended in a way that does not augment the force of action. But nothing can less contribute to vigor of action than protracted anxious fluctuation, intermixed with resolutions decided and revoked, while yet nothing causes a greater expense of feeling. The heart is fretted and exhausted by being subjected to an alternation of contrary excitements, with the ultimate mortifying consciousness of their contributing to no end. The long wavering deliberation, when it is to perform some bold action of difficult virtue, has often at once more to feeling than the action itself, or a series of such actions, would have cost; with the great disadvantage too of being relieved by none of that invigoration, which, to the man in action, would have sprung from the spirit of the action itself, and have renovated the ardor which it was expending. A person of decisive character, by consuming as little passion as possible in dubious musing, and as little vigorous passion as can secure its utmost value and use, by throwing it all into effectual operation.

Another advantage of this character is that it exempts from a great deal of interference and persecution, to which an irresolute man is subjected. Weakness in every form, tempts arrogance; and a man may be allowed to wish for a character with which stupidity and impertinence may not make so free, when a firm decisive spirit is recognized, it is curious to see how the space clears around a man, and leaves him room and freedom. The disposition to interrogate, dictate, or banter, preserves a respectful and polite distance, judging it not unwise to keep the peace with a person of so much energy. A conviction that he understands, and that he wills with extraordinary force, silences the conceit that intended to perplex or instruct him, and intimidates the malice that was disposed to attack him. There is a feeling, as in respect of fate, that the decrees of so inflexible a spirit must be right, or that at least they will be accomplished.

But not only will he secure the freedom of acting for himself, he will obtain also by degrees the coincidence of those in whose company he is to transact the business of life. If the manners of such a man are free from arrogance, and he can clothe his firmness in a moderate degree of insinuation: and if his measures have partly lost the appearance of being the dictates of his will under the wider and more extensive appearance that they are reasonable; both competition and fear will be laid to sleep, and his will may acquire an unresisted ascendency over many, who will be pleased to fall into the mechanism of a system, which they find makes them more successful and happy than they could have been amidst the anxiety of adjusting plans and expedients of their own, and the consequences of often adjusting them ill. I have known several parents both fathers and mothers, whose management of their families has answered this description, and have displayed a striking example of the facile compliance with which a number of persons, of different ages and dispositions, will yield to the decisions of a firm mind, acting on an equitable and enlightened system.

The last resource of this character, is hard inflexible pertinacity, on which it may be allowed to rest its strength, after finding it can be effectual in none of its milder forms. I remember admiring an instance of this kind, in a firm, sagacious, and very estimable old man, whom I well knew, and who is now dead. Being on a jury, in a trial of life and death, he was completely satisfied of the innocence of the prisoner; the other eleven were of the opposite opinion. But he was resolved the man should not be condemned; and as the first effort for preventing it, he very properly made application to the minds of his associates, spending several hours in laboring to convince them. But he made no impression, while he was exhausting the strength which was to be reserved for another mode of operation. He then calmly told them, it should now be a trial who could endure confinement and famine the longest, and that they might be quite assured he would sooner die than release them at the expense of the prisoner's life. In this situation they spent about twenty four hours; when at length all acceded to this verdict of acquittal.

It is not necessary to amplify on this indispensable importance of this quality, in order to the accomplishment of any thing eminently good. We instantly see, that every path to signal excellence is so obstructed and beset, that none but a spirit so qualified can pass. But it it is time to examine what are the elements which compose the character.

Dr. Channing.—The last number of Fraser's Magazine, a work which is regarded as high critical authority in England, contains a highly complimentary notice of the writings of Dr. Channing.—The writer commences with this bold and candid assertion;—"Channing is, unquestionably the finest writer of the age. His language is simple, nervous, and copious in Saxon. His periods are short, and constructed without any appearance of effort. His meaning does not require to be gathered, by dint of persevering investigation, from the fragments of a continuous harangue; it is delivered to us at once. Nor is this its transparency the result of weakness or want of compass: the very contrary is the case. From his writings there may be extracted some of the richest poetry and original conceptions, clothed in language, unfortunately for our literature, too little studied in the day in which we live. Channing appears to have imbued his mind with the spirit of the masters of our island tongue; their very words seem to have filled him, and to have become key notes to his finest compositions: their strong idiomatic English has evidently worked itself into the mind of our author, and taught him that, in the phraseology which weak minds pronounced to be jejune, there was a versatility capable of becoming, in the hands of a master-mind, expressive of great and enobling thought." The critic again says that "there is a force and finish, in the pages of Channing that indicate at once great genius and protracted elaboration;" and adds, "his writings have charmed us into the attitude of fervent admirers." This is high praise coming from so disinterested a quarter—but we do not disagree with the Fraserian critic in his estimate of the merits of Channing's masterly style.—Pearl.

GREEN BROOK
Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its object aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is never unless open for the reception of day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is roomily located, and, every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. G. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, todiscipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 25 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabeth town, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artist, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of fine, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject interesting to the refined and general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this purpose—translations from the various languages—the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—sketches of the stage, drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading matter, not to be found elsewhere—with individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

For only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing to the undersigned, post paid, the name of the subscriber, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the direction of Epes Sargent, and will receive, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryat, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of well-known others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors: and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains nor expense, industry, or experience, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —especially adapted for the perusal of our fair and gentle country women, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while in pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the same superb quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

The design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality; but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $30 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is therefore open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

Plainfield, Essex co. N. J., Oct. 18, 1837.

N. B.—Satisfactory reference will be cheerfully given whenever asked. Parents who intend to educate their sons from home, are in the mean time very respectfully invited to call and examine the establishment for themselves.

POETICAL.

The Outcast.—By Miss Vanderstein.

Aye, they may condemn him,
Yet so will not I,
When the storm-clouds are darkest,
The rude blasts most high,
When denounced and forsaken,
He shrinks from the storm,
Be my heart as unshaken,
My bosom as warm.
A love deeper than mother's,
Thou'lt find mine for thee,
And deserted by others,
Be dearer to me.

Oh! how little thou knowest
The strength of that faith,
Which the proud spirit keepeth,
Through danger and death.
In the sunshine of fortune,
It hides from the world
Its love, like the eagle,
With proud pinions furled;
But when rises the tempest
O'er those it loves best,
Like the eagle it battles,
And dies for its nest.

The Knickerbocker.

Ode.

There is a voice upon the wind,
A voice that comes from far,
A voice from where the ancient groves
And perfumed breezes are,
'Tis not the song of triumph, no;
Nor scream of heathen rage;
But 'tis a cry of gospel light,
The echo of the age.

The Karen from his rocky hills,
And natives of Japan,
Unite their voices with the sound
That echoes from Hindostan.
They call on us in words direct,
Or in their rites of wo—
Obey ye saints, your Lord's command,
"Go, preach my Gospel, go."

The voice of strong entreaty still
The breeze from Burmah brings,
The call is echoed from Siam,
And China's ancient kings,
The region of the Simoom blast,
Where Niger's waters flow,
Repeats to us the Lord's command,
"Go, preach my Gospel, go."

From many a river's templed bank,
Where Pagans bend the knee,
From continental villages,
And islands of the sea,
Each ship that floats upon the sea,
And all the winds that blow,
Ring out to us the Lord's command,
"Go, preach my Gospel, go."

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Soldier's Dog.—A common soldier of the Italian regiment of the Veliti of the Guards had, when at Milan, a dog that was much attached to him, following him to all his various military duties, and invariably mounting guard with him, and sharing his sentry box whenever he stood sentry at the gate of the vice-regal palace.

In 1812, at the time of the disastrous Russian campaign, among the numerous regiments composing the fine Italian army that marched with the Viceroy of Italy, Eugene Beauharnais, went the Veliti, and with them the master of the dog, Tofino, who was already well known to the soldiers, marched after his master, and crossing the Alps and traversing a great portion of the European continent (having been present at several battles where the Veliti were engaged,) finally arrived at Moscow. When the armies of Bonaparte were obliged to withdraw from that capital in flames, Tofino still followed his master, and went through all the horrors of that memorable retreat. He was at the murderous battle of Malo-jaroslewitz, where the Italians behaved gallantly and suffered great loss. The Viceroy's Veliti, though they had suffered tremendously, and still the exhaustion and appearance of a regiment when they reached the Beresina; but on the fatal passage of that river where so many thoutands perished, they lost more than half their remaining men, and the master of poor Tofino was among the number. After that passage no order was preserved in the retreat; the fragments of the Veliti were mixed up with the fragments of other regiments, and all went on in fearful confusion. Tofino, however, who had crossed the river in safety, and had lingered some time on the bank looking and moaning as though he missed somebody, was soon after seen trotting after some of the Veliti; and so he continued to be seen day after day and week after week, keeping up with the retreating soldiery, and always close to those who wore the uniform of his unfortunate master. The circumstance naturally made an impression on the men; and some of his master's comrades, in the midst of their own miseries and privations, attended to the wants of the dog who showed such fidelity to the regiment. But in spite of their cares and caresses, Tofino would never exclusively attach himself to any one man; on the contrary, he would always look out for the greatest number of the Veliti, and where they went he followed, regardless of the individuals who would have retained him by their particular kindness. In this manner from Moscow he reached Wilna, then traversing Lithuania and Poland, the kingdom of Prussia, a part of Saxony, the States of the Confederacy of the Rhine, Bavaria, the Tyrol, and the Alps—in short having performed a journey of more than 2500 English miles, Tofino again entered Milan in the summer of 1813, in the rear of a small body of the Veliti. How this poor Italian dog had travelled through regions and even over frosting rivers, where the very horses of the country had died, was a marvel to all who witnessed the tragical retreat.

As soon as he was within the walls of Milan, Tofino went straight to the barracks which the Veliti had occupied, and after waiting there some time, he trotted to the sentry-box by the palace gate, where he had so often mounted guard with his master, and he never more moved a hundred yards from it! The first two or three days he was observed to howl and moan, but this sad mood past, and he occupied his corner in the sentry box in silence. The interesting anecdote reached the ears of the Viceroy Beauharnais, who ordered that Tofino should be kindly treated and well fed, and considered as a pensioner of the state. But there was no need of these orders—the whole army, the whole population of Milan regarded the dog as almost a sacred animal, and were accustomed to show him as all strangers as one of the ornaments and wonders of the city.

In 1814, when the French were driven out of Italy, Tofino fell, with all Lombardy and the states of Venice, into the power of the Austrians, who, (whatever they did to the human beings that returned to their yoke) treated the dog as kindly as ever; he still occupied his corner of the sentry box, and was treated and pointed out as a hereditary pet. Tofino lived several months under the regime of the house of Austria, and then died full of honours and deeply regretted by the Milanese.

"Short-lived Beauties."—Not long since the cry of "strawberries," in almost every street saluted our ears with peculiarly pleasant sensations; for, in the first place, it reminded us of the unceasing goodness which gives us "all things richly to enjoy," in the return of another summer, with its appropriate fruits and flowers;—and, secondly, the strawberry plant and its fruit have particular claims upon our regard. The plant itself is a very humble, but a very thrifty and fruitful one—the flower is remarkably modest and pretty, and the fruit, in fragrance, color, and flavor, is one of a thousand—but how short-lived are these beauties!—how brief the season of their continuance, and how soon is that season over! In the street in which we live is a little cottage, occupied at present by an English family, whose taste in the cultivation of flowers does them great credit. The cottage stands back some distance from the street, and in front is the little parterre of which we now write. One of the first that adorned this little spot was the pink, a lowly, unpretending flower, whose fragrance may be said to vie with that of the rose. Every day as we passed, we viewed this little beauty, but its days were short; it soon withered; and the light winged zephyrs that caught up its odors, and wafted them to the passer-by, soon performed their office, and held themselves in readiness to render a similar service to others of the flora tribe. The garden above mentioned is perhaps now in its greatest glory. Two peach trees, more remarkable this year for the stateliness of their appearance among the flowers, and for the greenness of their leaves, than for the abundance of their fruit, ornament this enclosure. Two kinds of lilies—one perfectly white, the other red, hang down their heads, as though unconscious of their beauty. Three kinds of holly oaks—one crimson, one white, and the other a gay and beautiful flesh color, are now sending forth their beauteous tints whichever way the passenger's eyes chance to turn. The sweet-william wears a crown of gor geous beauty upon its head, which we venture to say is much more fine from care than the head of Solomon in all his glory, is not arrayed like one of these delightful flowers. Besides these there are many others, which we have not time or botanical skill to describe, but they are cultivated with great care, and offerd to the contemplative mind a lesson of beauty without vanity, superiority without pride, inferiority without envy, variety without confusion, and society without discord, such as we look for in vain among our own species. Such spots as these in the very heart of a city like N. York are as cheering to the eye as an oasis itself in the midst of the desert.

But we have almost lost the thread of our discourse. We intended to speak of the "short-lived beauties" of this world; a thought which was often suggested by the exceeding brevity of the season of fruits and flowers, but which was more impressively fixed on our mind by the scenes of July 4th. Often, as we saw the flowers, and heard the report of the pistol, or the rifle, we looked to see from which way the noise came—when, behold, the momentary pleasure was expiring like the cloud of smoke before our eyes; and the thought instantly rushed upon our mind, with all the force of argument, How short-lived! how transient all worldly pleasure! But we were more than ever convinced of the truth of the poet's remark, on the evening of Independence, as we entered the city and saw the beautiful illuminations at the entrance of the pleasure gardens, and witnessed in every direction the splendid rockets ascending and vanishing in the air. All these brought forcibly to our recollection the confessions of a young lady, which are as follows—"When I entered the Vauxhall gardens," said she, "and saw the beautiful walks and flowers, and variegated lamps suspended from the branches of the trees, and heard the music, and beheld the joyful faces and the gay dresses of the company, I thought, 'this is just like heaven.' But after a while the rain descended—the lamps went out—the music ceased—the company withdrew, and I was left alone. Then I thought, 'This is not like Heaven now!'" No, surely. Well might the poet say:—

"And false the light on glory's plume,
As fading hues of even;
And hope, and joy, and beauty's bloom,
Are blossoms gathered for the tomb—
There's nothing true but Heaven!"

Christian Advocate.

A heavy draft.—When Mr. Hankey was in vogue as a banker, a sailor had, as part of his pay, a draft on him for fifty pounds. This the sailor thought an immense sum, and calling at the house insisted upon seeing the master in private. This was at length acceded to: and when the banker and sailor met together, the following conversation ensued:—Sailor. "Mr. Hankey, I've got a tickler for you—didn't like to expose you before the lads." Hankey. "That was kind. Pray what's the tickler?"—Sailor. "Never mind, don't be afraid, I won't hurt you; 'tis a fifty."—Hankey. "Ah! that's a tickler indeed."—Sailor. "Don't fret, give me five pounds now, and the rest at so much per week—I shan't mention it to any body."

Chinese Anecdote.—A man who was accustomed to deal in marvels told a country cousin of his that he had three great curiosities in his possession—an ox that could travel five hundred miles a day, a cock that tells the hour of the night, and a dog that reads in a superior manner. "These are extraordinary things indeed; I must call upon you and beg a sight of them!" said the cousin. The liar returned home and told his wife what had happened, saying he had got into a scrape and knew not how to get out. "Oh, never mind," said she, "I can manage it." The next day the countryman, called and enquired, after his cousin, was told that he was gone to Pekin. "When is he expected back?"—"In seven or eight days."—"How can he return so soon?"—"He's gone off upon our ox."—"A propos of that I am told that you have a cock that marks the hour."—"A cock just then happened to crow. "Yes that is he; he not only tells the hour of night, but reports when a stranger comes." Then your dog that reads books—might I beg to see him?"—"Why, to speak the truth as our circumstances are but narrow, we have sent the dog out to keep school!"

Praying Machine.—On the high roads of Japan, every mountain, hall, and cliff is consecrated to some divinity, to whom travellers are required to address long prayers. As this would occupy too much time for those who are in haste, a machine is used consisting of an upright post with an iron plate set into the top. The turning round of this plate, upon which the prayer is engraved, is deemed equivalent to repeating the prayer.

Considerate.—In a village not a hundred miles from Cork, a medical gentleman was one night disturbed by repeated tappings at his door; and, on getting up, found a labouring man soliciting his immediate attendance for his wife. "Have you been long here?" asked the doctor. "Indeed, I have," answered Pat. "But why didn't you ring the night bell?"—"och! because I was afraid of disturbing your honour!"

Pat astonished.—An unfortunate Hibernian no frequenter of large parties, consequently a noodle in gastronomy, ruminating in his bliss upon the bank of a southern creek, espied a terrapin pluming itself. "Och, honey!" he exclaimed, solemnly, "that ever I should come to America to see a snuff box walk!—"What!" said his wife don't be a making fun of the birds!"

We extract the following very excellent article from the Peoria (Ill.) Register.

Cows, vs. Alcohol.—Colonel B. has one of the best farms on the Illinois river. About 100 acres of it are now covered with waving corn. When it first came up in the spring the crows seemed determined on its entire destruction. When one was killed it seemed as if a dozen came to its funeral. And though the sharp crack of the rifle often drew them away, they always returned with its echo.

The Colonel at length became weary of throwing grass, and resolved on trying the virtue of stones. He sent to the druggists for a gallon of alcohol, in which he soaked a few quarts of corn and scattered it over his field. The black legs came and partook with their usual relish—and as usual they were pretty well corned; and such a cooing and cackling,—such a strutting and staggering! The scene was like—but I will make no invidious comparisons,—yet it was very much like——

When the boys attempted to catch them, they were not a little amused at their staggering gait, and their mazey course through the air. At length they gained the edge of the woods, and there being joined by a new recruit, which happened to be sober, they united at the top of their voices in howling, hawing and shouting either the praise or curse of the alcohol. It was difficult to tell which, as they rattled away, without rhyme or reason, so very much like——

The colonel saved his corn. As soon as they became sober, they set their faces steadfastly against alcohol. Not another kernel would they touch in his field, lest it should contain the accursed thing while they went and pulled up the corn of his neighbors. To return like a dog to his vomit—like a white-washed sow to the mire—is to return to sin. They have too much respect for their character—black as they are—again to be found drunk."

The unwillingness of persons above forty to remember facts and persons, with which and whom they were contemporary, has been happily called by a wit, "the darkness of the middle ages."

A great woman not imperious, a fair woman not vain, a woman of common talent not jealous, an accomplished woman who scorns to shine—are four wonders, just great enough to be divided among the four quarters of the Globe.—Lavater.

Disastrous year.—The year 1835 will be long memorable for its numerous steamboat disasters. The record is out of all proportion with that of any former years. Within the last few months, besides the number of less important burnings, collapses and explosions, the folk wing is the melancholy list:—The Ben Sherrod, with the loss of 100 lives; the Monmouth, 400; the Home 100; the Mosbie, 120; the Oronoke, 130, the Washington, 30; the Pulaski, 100, Eight steam boats and ten hundred human lives lost! Can no means be devised for preventing the frequent recurrence of such instances of wholesale destruction of human life and property!—Mirror.

What's bred in the bone, etc.—A good story is told in the London Examiner of the duke of Wellington, who, though an Irishman, is not much in the habit of making bulls. He has, however, been lately caught tripping and made a characteristic display of his origin. His grace, in a debate in the house of Lords, stated that "two Irish clergymen had been murdered." Lord Mulgrave exclaimed, "No, not one!" upon which the duke rejoined, "If I am mistaken, I am sorry for it."—Ib.

Rochester.—Chancellor Kent, in reply to a complimentary letter addressed to him on a visit to this flourishing city, speaks incidentally of its growth in the annexed extract;

"Your residence is auspiciously chosen. This beautiful and flourishing city seems to have risen as by enchantment. It was forty years ago, and after I had held and finished the Ontario circuit, that I was attracted by the falls of the Genesee to visit this place, then a wilderness, with the exception of a single hut in this vicinity. I now look with amazement upon its growth and prosperity, upon its strong and indubitable marks of energy, enterprise, skill, and lasting resources."

And Rochester is a sample of what American enterprise can do in improving the facilities afforded by Nature so abundantly and extensively throughout our favored land.

A Novel Question for the Lawyers.—A farmer found a cloud of grasshoppers devouring his young buck-wheat, and drove them off; they lit on his next neighbor's and served him the same way. The latter has commenced an action against the former for damages. Query—can it be sustained?

A Collector.—The founder of the Journal des Modes, M. de la Mesangere, who lately departed this transitory scene, was rather curious in the article of silk stockings, upwards of a thousand pair of which were found in his wardrobe when the inventory of his effects were drawn up. He was also ascertained to be the possessor of 20,00 pairs of shoes, 40 umbrellas, 72 blue coats, 100 round hats, 90 snuff boxes of various dimensions 365 shirts—one for every day in the year, and 10,000 frames, in 25 and 20 sous pieces of six inches. At the close of every week he undaunted edly braved the torture of a new pair of shoes. He was a staunch partisan of short unmentionables, and never was guilty of premeditatedly carrying an umbrella; his custom, when surprised by a storm, being to purchase one at the first umbrella maker's within the line of his promenade, 40 of those conveniencies being, as before mentioned, found in his house.—Galignani's Messenger.

The Extent of the British Empire.—The Montreal Herald, speaking of the possessions of Great Britain, says;—"On her vast territories the Sun never sets. As the evening rays forsake the groves of Honduras, his morning beams strikes the spires of Calcutta, and before they disappear from the population of Montreal, they gladden British subjects on the western shores of New Holland. The British flag is never struck, and the ships of her Navy, her wooden walls, are floating fortresses, with military stations, dotting all over the Globe, in every clime and in every sea."

This beautiful thought is more poetically expressed by Mr. Webster, in one of his speeches, where he describes England as a "power to which for purpose of foreign conquest and subjugation, Rome in the height of her glory, is not to be compared—a power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beats following the sun, and accompanying the hours, circles the earth daily with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England."

The Nashville Railway is finished 12 miles, and the lake Pontochartrain is reached.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

It has lately occurred to me that the prospect before us requires the serious consideration of all good-men, apart from every party view. Gen. Dickerson's statements as to our indebtedness abroad ought to be received as good evidence by his friends; we on our part, do not dispute the fact that we are importing too much, and exporting too little. Let us add together the balances of our indebtedness as given by the Ex-Secretary for a year or two past, and the probable amount of our indebtedness on stocks, and see the result.

According to him—

In 1832, the bal. was against us		$14,000,000
1836,	do	61,000,000
1837,	do	23,500,000
1833, '34 and '35, on the average of those above,		98,500,000
Total indebtedness of the years 1832 to 1837, inclusive,		197,000,000

I do not doubt we are in debt the full amount of this sum, (one hundred and ninety-seven millions of dollars;) and supposing it paid by remittances of state stocks, bank stock, and railroad stock, &c. we are still in debt. The debt is not paid; it is only the form of it changed. I have seen it stated that our indebtedness on stocks varied from 150 to 220 millions.

It should be remembered that our foreign debt, when the credit has expired, is on interest; and more especially so when it assumes the form of stocks. The interest, commissions and exchange on a foreign debt of $200,000,000, will be twelve millions. Here is an item to be remitted, for which we receive nothing in return. We must export to the amount of all we import, and twelve millions more, merely to keep square; if we export any less, we are still increasing the debt.

Now, sir, what is the strong propensity of men (and of women too) with respect to buying, especially if they think they are buying cheap? If they buy with cash which was earned hard, they are apt to buy many things which they could do without; if they buy on credit they are still more apt to be tempted into imprudent and unnecessary purchases.

Can we then hope to pay off the balance we owe, or even keep from increasing it, under that further repeal of the tariff which is to take place in 1840 and 1842? shall we not rather go more and more in debt, buying as we think, cheap goods, until another revulsion takes place; another suspension of the banks winds up and destroys our credit and banking system altogether? The banks to be safe, must not extend their accommodations; no new charters for banks must be granted; speculation in every form must be repressed; and especially the importation of foreign goods must be discouraged, or we have only seen the beginning, not the end of trouble.

I am not an alarmist; I am not given to despondency. On the contrary, I believe that every exhibition of prosperity in the past nine years could be more than realized again in the 9 years to come but not under a low tariff, nor under a state of foreign commerce that in six years from now, will add 197 millions more to our foreign debt.

An Old Tariff Man.

Interesting to sculptors.—It is stated in the National Intelligencer, that Mr. Featherstonhaugh, United States' Geologist, has ascertained the existence of some important deposits of White Statuary Marble in the Cherokee country. He has followed an obscure ridge in the mountains six miles, consisting entirely of that valuable substance, hitherto only seen in the United States in blocks not exceeding a few inches. He reports one of these deposites as equal to that of Massa Carrara in Italy, with which he is familiar. Marble of this kind has hitherto been brought at a great expense from Italy. The block for the statue of Hamilton, destroyed by fire in the Exchange, if we mistake not, was represented to have cost not less than $2000.

Col. Sherburne of Washington city, who had been for some weeks past in the Cherokee nation on business for the government, has, we have been informed, contracted with the proprietor of the land on which this valuable and beautiful marble was discovered by the Geologist above named. It is thought to be inexhaustible, and more valuable than any gold mine yet discovered in the Cherokee nation, being of that cast as not only to command a good price, but will be in very great demand. The quarry is within six miles of navigable water, and there is a never failing stream within one hundred yards that will carry 1000 saws if found necessary.—(From a Southern Paper.

Grasshoppers.—According to the Delaware State journal, the country about Wilmington is overrun with grasshoppers. The editor says;—

Never in our recollection, were they to be seen in such myriads, and for the first time we hear our farmers exclaiming against their destructiveness. The grass which ordinarily constitutes their food is burnt up by the drought, and the voracious insect, deprived of its wonted sustenance, is making great havoc with the blades, and even with the ears of corn. A great deal of fodder has been eaten up, and much corn we have no doubt, will be seriously injured by this usually harmless insect.

New Banking Facilities.—It will be recollected by the reader, that a short time since we published a letter from New York, stating that John Jacob Astor and J Delafield Esqs., had associated themselves under the late law of New York, on the subject for the establishing of a new Bank. This bank appears to be the only one which under that law has yet gone into operation. We have seen a bill drawn by J. Delafield, Broker, 14 Wall street, New York, payable at the banking Office of Delafield and Burnet in this city, where they are redeemable by other paper or in specie. We understand arrangements are in progress for their receipt in various Banks in the West.—Cincin. Gazette.

RUN AND MURDER.—Philip Edwards, a respectable farmer of Worcester Co. Mass. was seized on the highway by John L. Davis, a drunken neighbor, on the 15th inst. and killed by a blow from an axe. Davis was not drunk at the time, had been so for several days previous, and was in "mania a potu."

Davis had been out of his house for some time, shooting and filling the air with horrid screams and yells. No one was present to witness the horrid tragedy: but from the subsequent statements of Davis, it appears that he imagined that "Washington was moving in circles high in the air above his head, and commanding him to go forth and kill." Soon after the perpetration of the deed, Davis went to another neighbor to obtain his aid in grinding an ax in order, as he said, to go on with the work of death. He is in custody.

The Burlington Circuit and Oyer and Terminer, adjourned on Thursday last, after a session of more than two weeks. The term was principally occupied by criminal business. Clayton Cramer, who was tried for the murder of Hosea Moore, was found guilty of murder in the second degree, and under the provisions of the statute passed last winter, sentenced to imprisonment for life. Edward Wilber who was indicted in May last, for arson, was acquitted. Judge Dayton presided throughout these long and laborious trials, with distinguished ability and to the satisfaction of all parties.

The Potomac Aqueduct.—Alexandria is prosecuting this gigantic work,—the aqueduct which is intended to carry the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal across the Potomac,—with a persevering energy that is worthy of all praise. The following paragraph from the Alexandria Gazette of yesterday will furnish some idea of the undertaking and the difficulties attending it;

We are gratified in learning that the masonry of the fourth pier of the Potomac Aqueduct is advancing rapidly from its rocky foundation at the bottom of the Potomac. It is not often, not so often as we could wish, that we are enabled to note the progress of this mighty work, and it has been a matter of surprise to us, that the frame of so stupendous a work has not attracted more attention from the scientific and other journals of the country; if, as we are informed, and have no doubt that, for the depth of foundation under water, the work which in future times is to be the "the feather in the cap" of Alexandria, exceeds any other on record; The greatest depth that is, from the rock to the level of high tide is 32 feet.

Tarring and Feathering.—The use of Tar and Feathers in the punishment of crime is one of great antiquity. Richard I. in his voyage to the Holy Land, ordained this; "If any one is convicted of theft, let his head be shaved, like Champion' s let melted pitch be poured upon it, and feathers shaken on it, that he may be known; and let him be set on shore at the first land to which the ship approaches."

A Most Distressing Occurrence.—In the vicinity of Milan, in Ripley county, a few days since two brothers named Risinger, being in the woods hunting game, just as the light of the sun was disappearing, one saw something, and told his comrade to shoot; he did so, and the object fell. On approaching the spot, they discovered, in place of a deer, the daughter of one of the men, just breathing her last. The ball had penetrated the eye and passed out at the back of the head. The young woman had gone to the woods to hunt the cows, and by the imprudence of her own father, was thus brought to an untimely grave.—(Republican.)

Egypt is fast becoming of moment in the opinion of other nations. Five years ago there was not a steam vessel of any nation plying from Egypt; now those of England, France, Austria, and Egypt number eighteen regular opportunities to and fro every month from Alexandria. When will our Government build the "Great Eastern," of 1,500 tons to go direct (both ways) between Plymouth and Alexandria, in fifteen days, with Indian mails and passengers, and thus keep the French and Austrian lines from our Indian correspondence? I shall visit Canton via. Calcutta, and see if sufficient interest and capital cannot be realized there for the extension of Indian steam navigation to China.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 11.

Grouse Shooting—Our sportsmen have a delightful time of it just now. On Wednesday last Dr. Capt. C., Mr. C. and Mr. M., went to the looking Glass prairie, and in less than twelve hours the four shot and bagged one hundred and thirty one grouse. Let an eastern sportsman, or any combination of them beat this if they can. We had the pleasure of a brace for dinner, and finer could not be desired by the veriest epicure in the land.—Repub.

OLDEST OF THE CRAFT.—The venerable Col. Andrew Marchale, a veteran of the Revolution, died on the 10th. inst at Washington, Adams cy. Mis. The deceased was the father of the typographical art in Mississippi, having brought into the then territory in 1797, a small printing press the first ever used there.

Mr. Duncan, of Ohio, has been nominated for re-election to Congress by the democrats of Cincinnati.

Health of Charleston.—The Norfolk Herald of Saturday says: "We learn from a gentleman who left Charleston on Sunday last, and arrived here in the cars yesterday afternoon, that the sickness raged to an alarming degree when he left there.—In one house four or five of its inmates were carried off by the prevailing disease. He also informs that on Saturday last, while attending to the burial of Mr. Frederick, (brother of Capt. Michael Frederick, of Baltimore,) he counted forty two graves opened, in one of which he saw three coffins deposited. The mechanics generally were leaving the place."

Rail Road Accident—We learn from the Lockport Democrat, that while the train of cars on the Lockport and Niagara Falls Railroad was going west on Saturday of last week, the train ran over a squaw, who was lying drunk across the track in the Tuscarora Reservation. Both legs were severed from her body and she died soon after. A bunch of shanties growing close to the track, prevented the engineer from discovering her in season. The engine was reversed, but in consequence of a recent rain, the wheels slipped upon the track. The squaw was owned by the Indians had been to Lewiston, and purchased a shillings worth of whiskey, a small part of which was found in a tin pail by her side.

The residence of Mrs. Sigourney at Hartford, was sold on the 22d ult. to James M. Bunce, of Hartford, for 9,000 dollars. The grounds and building lots about the house were not included in the sale, and will be sold separately hereafter.

The Bangor Whig states that 1000 stands of arms had arrived in that city for the purpose of equipping the Lincoln regiment of frontier militia. It would seem that Gov. Kent is in earnest in his deeme to settle the North Eastern boundary question.

From the Putnam co. Illinois Journal.

The Crops.—In this section of Illinois we presume a better corn crop will be raised this season, than for many years past has been known within it. The weather indeed has been peculiarly favorable for corn, having been very warm, and generally sufficiently wet. Our wheat crop is likewise tolerable, so that we shall most probably have a sufficiency of "bread stuffs"—and to spare, notwithstanding the great number of men who probably will be engaged upon our public works in this quarter for some time to come.

The crops of cotton and corn in Mississippi are said to promise abundantly in the central and southern sections of the state.

Corn Crop in Kentucky.—The Louisville Journal says,—We see some complaint in regard to the corn crop in Kentucky, but we have reason to believe they will be unusually abundant. About a week ago the corn was generally suffering from drought, but we have recently had copious rains in this neighborhood, which it is hoped have extended generally over the country.

The crop of wheat raised in Livingston county, Michigan, is estimated at about twenty bushels for each inhabitant. The county has only been settled three years.

Lever's Republications.—Mrs. Lever, widow of the late Wm. Lever, gives notice that the lamentable death of her husband will in no way retard or interrupt the publication of the foreign reviews and magazines, but they will continue to be issued with the same promptitude and regularity as heretofore. The enterprise deserves the most ample support.

Another Field Fire in West Jersey.—We learn by this morning's mail that another destructive fire is raging in Burlington county. It is stated that a few days since, it had made near approach to Hanover furnace, but a timely turn out and a steady and strong application of "fire to fire," turned away the enemy. The conflagration however, continues with unabated force, and is sweeping away forests and swamps with frightful rapidity. Its ravages in the cedar swamps are more deplored by the property holders than are timber on the uplands.—The ground is so perfectly dry that whole acres of cedar trees are burned, stock and branch, and all the under brush is licked up like shavings.

The cause of this fire is traced to the carelessness of two old women who went into a meadow and let fall some fire from their tobacco pipes.

The United States Gazette says, "the cloudy pillars of smoke are plainly seen by day from the city, and unless rain should come, the most serious apprehensions of the loss of property, and perhaps of human life may be entertained."

The mansions near Frederick (Md.) were on fire on sunday. The smoke hung over the adjoining plains in a dense cloud, and the flames were visible for many miles. There were many wood cutters' houses scattered through the mountain, which were supposed to be burned.

A letter of the 15th ult. from the Cherokee Camp, in the Journal of Commerce, mentions that the Indians were making all necessary arrangements, under John Ross and the Delegation which impressed them at Washington, to complete the removal, in detachments of 1000. Much sickness has prevailed, and an alarming number of deaths have occurred in some of the Camps, from the extreme heat, deficiency of accommodations sudden change in their mode of living, anxiety and depression of mind, medicial neglect &c.

☞ Letters of the 19th ult. from Newmansville Florida, mention that Capt. Tompkins and Lt. Blake of the Dragoons, who had just returned from a distressing expedition, were dangerously ill. The expedition penetrated where savages had only gone before, and destroyed two considerable towns.

They found a camp which must have been a moment before abandoned as meat was cooking.

The Indians had carried off three baggage waggons and killed two soldiers.

"The Globe says that lightning is more apt to strike buildings containing large quantities of metallic substances." If that is the case there's very little danger of its striking the United States Treasury.—(Louisville Journal.

Our Jewels.—We take the following from the toasts at the late Waterford festival in Kentucky—

Our Distinguished Senator Henry Clay.—Erect and faithful in defeat or victory—his history is the history of the nation—his glory the glory of the Republic. Power can add nothing to his greatness—time can abate nothing of his wide spread fame.

Daniel Webster.—The great expounder and defender of the Constitution; on his broad shoulders we would rest the fame of the Republic. His patriotism, broad as the Union, unites a nation stronger than the bands of Iron. History will take charge of him as a blessing to posterity.

The banks of Milledgeville Geo. have determined to resume specie payments on the 1st of October next.

THE UNION.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.

Tuesday, September 22, 1835.

Let there sworn upon the Altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of Tyranny over the mind of man. THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Whig State Convention.

This Convention was held in Trenton, on Wednesday last, first in the State House, and that having been found not sufficiently large, it moved to the city hall, which had been prepared for the comfortable accommodation of 700 persons;—that too was found too small to hold all the delegates, and at noon the Convention adjourned to meet in the State House yard. The number of delegates was from 800 to 1,000, perhaps the largest assembly of the kind that ever convened at Trenton, and notwithstanding the great number of delegates the utmost harmony prevailed.

Joseph Parter, of Gloucester was chosen president, and a vice-president from each county was appointed. A committee of five were appointed to prepare and publish an address to the people of this state, of which the hon. Theodore Frelinghuysen was one. It was then unanimously resolved that the old Congressional ticket be renominated for members of the next congress, viz.

John B. Aycrigg, of Bergen county.
John P. B. Maxwell, Warren,
Wm. Halsted, Mercer,
Joseph F. Randolph, Monmouth,
Charles C. Stratton, of Gloucester,
Thomas J. Yorke, Salem.

In the afternoon session a number of appropriate resolutions were passed, and much important business transacted—after which the Convention adjourned, at 4 o'clock.

Late Elections.

Indiana.—Full returns from the late election in Indiana have been received, and show the following result:

On joint ballot in the Legislature.

Whigs,	26
Democrats,	57
Whig majority,	33.

In the last Legislature were 33 whigs to 64 democrats—whig majority then 19.

Missouri.—Complete returns from Missouri show the following as the state of parties in the Legislature:

Democrats,	80
Whigs,	52
Democratic majority,	28

The last legislature was composed of 109 democrats and 23 whigs, making the democratic majority, at that time, 86.

Rhode Island.—Full returns show that the legislature just chosen stands as follows;

Whigs,	46
Democrats,	29

In the last Assembly were 44 whigs to 25 democrats, so that the whigs have gained 2 and the democrats have lost 2.

Illinois.—Full returns are at length received from Illinois. Two democrats and one conservative is elected to Congress, and the democratic governor is chosen. The contest in the third Congressional district was very close, but it is finally ascertained that the Administration have carried it, by 130 majority.

Alabama.—63 democrats and 28 whigs elected to the Legislature, and eleven counties to be heard from.

North Carolina.—In the Senate just elected are 27 whigs and 23 democrats—in the House, 65 whigs and 55 democrats. The N. C. Standard says that the State Rights party hold the balance of power, and that they are opposed to Mr. Clay and a National Bank.

Kentucky.—The democrats claim a gain of 8 or 10 members in the Legislature. How true this is we are unable to say.

☞ It is curious to observe how differently the party papers look upon the same facts. The following is a good specimen:

The Difference.—Of four hundred and forty-four clerks employed in the public offices in Washington, a large majority are opposed to the present Administration. This toleration of opinion is no part of the creed of the federal party.—When they obtain power they make a clean sweep of every political opponent: be his office ever so paltry, or he ever so poor. It is a principle with them, and judges, and lamp lighters, clerks, and hearse drivers, share alike, none are too high to be reached, or too low to be overlooked. And yet this is a faction which is continually whining about "proscription for opinion's sake," and taunting the friends of the Administration with being the "spoils party." Such cool impudence is without a parallel.—Concord Freeman

☞ Of the 444 clerks employed in the public offices at Washington, a large majority are opposed to the present Administration.

(Albany Argus.

What a reproach to the present Administration," that even its very employers, the very men who have the closest and most intimate knowledge of the Indians, and the strongest interest in supporting it, are yet compelled to disapprove and condemn its measures! If the official servants of the Administration must needs bear witness against their employers, how shall they escape condemnation from the people? The Argus has given a sharper rebuke to the men in power at Washington, than ever was uttered by any Whig journalist or speaker. (Com. Adv.

From England.

Ten days Later.—The packet ship South America arrived, 5th inst. bringing English papers to the 4th August. Business was in good condition—cotton had advanced in price,—and money was plenty at 3 per cent. per annum. On the 1st. 28,670 ounces of gold were shipped from London for New York.

A frightful famine was prevalent in India.

A terrible gale occurred on the Black Sea June 10th, causing the destruction of several Russian vessels employed against the Circassians, and also many merchant ships.

Parliament was engaged with the Irish tithe bill, and the municipal reform bill.

We learn from the State Gazette that a large new Methodist Church was dedicated to the service of Almighty God, in Trenton, on Sabbath, the 8th inst.

The caucus V. B. men of Hunterdon have selected the following ticket:

Joseph Moore, David Neighbor, Philip Hiler, James Snyder.

A new Administration paper has just been started at Flemington, entitled the "Hunterdon Democrat." It appears well conducted, judging from the first number.

The whigs of Monmouth county have formed the following ticket:

Samuel Mairs, for Council. Thomas Miller, Edmund T. Williams, James Gulick, and Hance Herbert, for Assembly.

The Mechanics' Banking Institution of New York, have engaged rooms in the New Merchants Exchange and expect to go into operation on the 1st of October.

Two banks are organized under the new law also at Buffalo, with a capital of $200,000 each, and expect soon to commence business.

An association under the new law has also been formed at Rochester, with a capital of 500 thousand dollars with privilege of increasing it to three millions. $150,000 were subscribed as soon as the books were opened.

Potatoes are selling at Pottsville, Pa. at 12 or 13 shillings a bushel. At Morristown, 8 shillings. In Plainfield, 6.

Peaches in New York, 3 shillings a bushel.

From the returns received at the custom house at New York, it appears that there has been imported in that district, $775,000, in specie, from Aug. 20th to Sept. 1st; and 1,500 exported.

The Ladies' Fair in Morristown last week, produced a nett profit of $365, which is to be appropriated towards purchasing a parsonage for the Episcopal Church.

The Exchange Bank of Virginia went into operation at Norfolk Saturday before last. It has branches at Richmond, Petersburg and Clarksville. The state owns half of the capital stock.

The keel boat Hindoo, which was recently lost in descending the Ohio river from Pittsburg on her way to Louisville, had on board a cargo of dry goods valued at nearly 50,000 dollars.

The whale ship, John and Edward, of N. London, has returned to that port with 1500 barrels of oil—having been obliged to return with half a cargo, in consequence of the mutiny of the crew. Sixteen of the hands have been six months in irons, and they have been sent to New Haven for trial.

The wheat crop in Michigan has been abundant. A letter from Washtenaw county states that the wheat on every acre will pay for the land, clearing, ploughing and fencing, and leave a profit of five dollars besides.

The steam ship, Great Western probably left Bristol for New York, on Saturday afternoon last, and will arrive in New York, about the 23d of this month.

There are 4000 men employed on the line of the Croton Aqueduct, which is to supply the city of New York, with pure water. About six of the sections will be completed this fall. The commissioners will now proceed to contract for the "Low Bridge" across the Harlem river, according to the original plan. The whole, when finished, will be the most magnificent work in the U. S.—N. Y. Post.

Excellent.—The following toast was given at Providence on the 4th, by Albert Green, Esq.—

"Freedom of conscience—wherever it is enjoyed—may every man have religion enough of his own, to be willing not to meddle with that of his neighbors."

A Prolific Potato.—Mr. Ellis, of West Claremont, N. H. has a potato patch, of 20 feet square the vines of which measure one mile in length, the product of one single potato, which he planted in the middle of May last.

The woods in Maryland are still on fire. The destruction of timber will be immense.

Horrid Affair.—The Norfolk Beacon of the 27th ult. says: "We learn by the Richmond boat last evening that one of the visitors at the White Sulphur springs, in Greenbrier drew a pistol at table and shot another visitor dead on the spot. The name of the man who was killed was named Walkins.

It is stated that the proceeds of the Smithsonian bequest—about half a million—have been loaned to the new bank, organizing in New York under the presidency of Mr. Beers, on the security of an equal amount of Arkansas stock, bearing an interest of six per cent.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that the whole of the 9th instalment of the Neapolitan indemnity, $221,035, has been received for distribution, at the bank of America, in N. Y.

A "right whale" was picked up at sea, dead, and towed ashore at Salisbury Point, near Newburyport, Mass. on the 26th ult. The next day about 3000 persons went to see it.

American Ingenuity.—Wm. Norris & Co. of Philadelphia have just completed a superior locomotive engine, which is intended for the Austrian Railroad between Dresden and Prague.—This is the second engine made by them for Austria.

Progress of Temperance.—At the recent elections in Rhode Island the town of Providence, by a vote of 307 to 238, decided that no licences shall be granted in that town for the sale of intoxicating liquors for one year from the 1st Monday in October next. North Providence, do. Warwick has voted to grant licences.

Unparallelled Dispatch.—We were shown a box of goods this morning received by Griffith, Standart & Co. for R. S. Cox, Zanesville, Ohio, shipped from Bristol, England, per the steam ship Great Western, on the 20th July last. Such is the triumph of steam, that goods from Bristol, England, reach Cleaveland, Ohio, in just one month! What is distance where art and genius combine to overcome it? Measured by time our city is now only 30 days from the commercial mart of the world.—Cleaveland Herald.

Operation of the New Steamboat Law.—We see it stated in the western papers that there are about 40 steam boats laid up at the ship yards near Cincinnati, and undergoing repairs. Several of them are getting in new engines.

The French Frigate Didon and consort went to sea Sunday before last. The former, in passing out, was piloted through Gedney's newly discovered channel with perfect safety, having several feet of water to spare. Another proof of the value of this hitherto unknown track to and from the ocean.

Some workmen on Bunker-hill, Boston, have dug up parts of two skeletons. One of the skulls was almost entire, and contained a bullet, exhibiting the hole which it made in its death passage. A continental button was also found near the same place.

During the first week of this month 8000 brls of flour came down the North River to N. York and 400 firkins butter.

Wheat was selling at Maysville, Ky. on the 30th ult. for 65 cents per bushel.

Judge Betts, of the U. S. District court, lately appointed Elihu S. Bunker and John Clark, under the act of Congress of the last session, inspectors of steam boats, &c. plying to and from New York, and licensed. Mr. Clark was in the employ of Mr. Fulton, and is reputed a skilful engineer. Capt. B's qualities are well known.

Pirates Taken.—U. S. ship Cyane, on her recent voyage to the Mediterranean, spoke the Hibernia, Capt Cobb. who informed Capt. P. that the English brig Isabella had a short time previous been robbed by pirates not many miles from where the two ships then were; and accordingly Capt P. determined, if possible to overhaul the rascals and bring them to justice.—Touching at the Western Islands, he there learned that the Pirates were bound to Santa Cruz Tenerife, for which port she sailed immediately, and on her arrival found the Pirate in the Harbor at anchor. Information was given to the English Consul, and the Pirates were taken and put in prison to meet their trial at Santa Cruz. The Cyane sailed the 28th July for Maderia on her way to Tangier.—Jour. of Com.

Two Grist Mills Destroyed.—About four o'clock yesterday morning, two mills adjoining each other in Fishkill, near the landing, one owned and occupied by Robt. Newlin, the other by Mr. Joseph T. Barnes, were, with the whole of their contents, consisting of between three and four thousand bushels of grain, entirely destroyed.—The whole loss about $20,000. The grain was insured and the mills partly so.—Journal of Commerce.

Correspondence of the Newark Daily Advertiser.

TRENTON, Sept. 5th. 1838.

The fire which has been raging for some weeks in Gloucester and Burlington counties, continues to defy all efforts to resist its progress. It is now distinctly seen from this city, and we hear this morning that it is nearing the Delaware at Camden. Besides the destruction of an immense quantity of property, several lives it is reported, have been lost by suffocation. Companies of 5 and 400 men have turned out to stop it, but in vain.

☞ Among the articles at the Mechanic's Fair in N. Y. is an ancient cradle, 287 years old. It is a box and bears this inscription:

"200 years old maid 1541. The cradle I sold to day is one in which the brave Walker fought the seige of London derry Capt. Ash it came to me through my ancestors. John Dickerson.

Further Extract from Foster's Essay on Decision of Character.

PERHAPS the best mode would be, to bring in, to our inquiries, in succession, the most remarkable examples of this character that we have known in real life, or that we have read of in history or even in fiction, and attentively observe in their conversation, manners, and actions, what principles appear to produce, or to constitute, this commanding distinction. You will easily pursue this investigation yourself. I lately made a partial attempt, and shall offer you a number of suggestions.

As a previous observation, it is beyond all doubt that very much depends on the constitution of the body. It would be for physiologists to explain the manner in which corporeal organization affects the mind; I only assert the fact, that there is in the material construction of some persons, much more than of others, some quality which augments, if it does not create, both the stability of their resolution, and the energy of their active tendencies. There is something that, like the ligatures which one class of the Olympic combatants bound on their hands and wrists, braces round, if I may so describe it, and compresses, the powers of the mind, giving them a steady forcible spring and reaction, which they would presently lose, if they could be transferred into a constitution of soft, yielding, treacherous debility. The action of such character seems to demand something firm in its corporeal basis, as massive engines require, for their weight and for their working, to be fixed on a solid foundation. Accordingly I believe it would be found, that a majority of the persons most remarkable for decisive character, have possessed great constitutional firmness. I do not mean an exemption from disease and pain, nor any certain measure of mechanical strength, but a tone of vigor, the opposite to lassitude, and adapted to great exertion and endurance. This is chiefly viewed in respect to many of them, by the prodigious labors and deprivations which they have borne in prosecuting their designs. The physical nature has seemed a proud ally to the moral one, and with a hardness that would never shrink, has sustained the energy that could never remit

A view of the disparities between the different races of animals inferior to man will show the effect of organization on disposition. Compare, for instance a lion, with the common beasts of our fields, many of them composed of a larger bulk of animated substance. What a vast superiority of courage, impetuous movement, and determined action; and we attribute this difference to some great dissimilarity of modification in the composition of the animated material. Now it is probable that a difference somewhat analogous subsists between some human bodies and others, and that this is no small part of the cause of the striking inequalities in respect of the decisive character. Every decisive man has probably more of the physical quality of a lion in his composition than other men.

It is observable that women in general have less inflexibility of character than men: and though many moral influences contribute to this difference, the principal cause may probably be something less firm in the corporeal texture. Now that physical quality, whatever it is, from the existence of a similar measure of which in the corporeal constitution, men have less firmness than men, may be possessed by one man more than by men in general in a greater degree of difference than that by which men in general exceed women.

If there have been found some resolute spirits powerfully asserting themselves in feeble vehicles, it is so much the better; since this would authorize a hope, that if all the other grand requisites can be combined, they may form a strong character, in spite of the counteraction of an undapted constitution. And on the other hand, no constitutional hardness will form the true character, without those grand principles; though it may produce that false and contemptible kind of decision which we term obstinacy; a stubbornness of temper, which can assign no reasons but mere will, for a constancy which acts in the nature of dead weight rather than of strength; resembling less the reaction of a powerful spring than the gravitation of a big stone.

The first prominent mental characteristic of the person whom I describe, is, a complete confidence in his own judgement. It will perhaps be said, that this is not so uncommon a qualification. I however think it is uncommon. It is indeed obvious enough, that almost all men have a flattering estimate of their own understanding, and that so long as this understanding has no harder task than to form opinions, it are not ever distrusted in action, they have a most self-complacent assurance of being right. This assurance extends to the judgements which they pass on the proceedings of others. But let them be brought into the necessity of adopting actual measures in an untried proceeding, where unassisted by any previous example or practice, they are reduced to depend on the resources of pure judgment alone, and you will see, in many cases, this confidence of opinion vanish into air. The mind seems all at once placed in a misty vacuity, where it reaches round on all sides, but can find nothing to take hold of. Or if not lost in vacuity, it is overwhelmed in confusion, and feels as if its faculties were annihilated as soon as it begins to think of schemes and calculations among the possibilities, chances and hazards, which overspread a wide untrodden field; and the conscious imbecility becomes more intense, when it is believed that consequences of serious or unknown evil are depending on the decisions which are to be formed amidst so much uncertainty. The thought painfully recurs at each step and turn, I may be right, but it is more probable I am wrong. It is like the case of a traveller walking in London, who having no certain direction through the vast confusion of streets to the place where he wishes to be, advances, and hesitates, and turns, and enquires, and becomes, each corner, still more inextricably perplexed." A man in this situation feels he shall be very unfortunate if he cannot accomplish more than he can understand,—a not this frequently, when brought to the practical test, the state of mind not much disposed in general to undervalue its own sense?

The case where judgement is not so completely bewildered, you will yet perceive a great practical distrust of it. A man has perhaps pursued a considerable way towards a decision, but then lingers at a small distance from it, till necessity, with a stronger hand than conviction, impels the exertion. He cannot walk the whole length of the question, and suspects the part beyond his sight to be the most important, because it is beyond. He fears that certain possible consequences, if they should follow, would cause him to reproach himself for his present determination. He wonders how this or the other person would have acted in the same circumstances, eagerly catches at any thing like a respectable precedent, and looks anxiously round to know what each person thinks on the subject; while the various opinions to which he listens, perhaps only serve to confound his perception of the track of thought by which he had hoped to reach his conclusion. Even when that conclusion is obtained, there are not many minds that might not be brought a few degrees back into dubious hesitation, by a man of respected understanding saying, in a confident tone, your plan is injudicious; your selection is unfortunate; the event will disappoint you.

It cannot be supposed that I am maintaining such an absurdity as that a man's complete reliance on his own judgement is necessarily proof of that judgement being correct and strong. Intense stupidity may be in this point the rival of clear sighted wisdom. I had once some knowledge of a person, whom no mortal not even Cromwell, could have excelled in the article of confidence in his judgement, and consequent inflexibility of conduct while at the same time his successive schemes were ill judged to a degree that made his disappointments ridiculous rather than pitiable. He was not an example of that simple obstinacy which I have mentioned before; for he considered his measures, and did not want for reasons which satisfied himself beyond a doubt of their being most judicious. This confidence of opinion may be possessed by a person in whom it will be contemptible or mischievous; but its proper place is in a very different character, and without it there can be no dignified actors in human affairs.

If, after observing how foolish this confidence appears as a feature in a weak character, it be required what it is in a justly decisive person's manner of thinking, which authorizes him in this firm assurance that his view of the concerns before him is comprehensive and accurate: I answer, that he is justified in this persuasion, because he is conscious that objects are presented to his mind with an exceedingly distinct and perspicuous aspect, not like the shapes of moonlight, or like Ossians ghosts, dim forms of uncircumscribed shade: because, he sees the different parts of the subject in an arranged order, not in dispersed fragments; because in each deliberation the main object keeps its clear pre-eminence, and he perceives the bearings which the subordinate and conducive ones have on it; because perhaps several dissimilar trains of thought lead him to the same conclusion; and because he finds that his judgement does not vary according to the moods of his feelings.

* "Why does not the man call a hackney coach?" a gay reader, I am aware, will say of the person so bemazed in the great town. So he might, certainly; and the gay reader and I have only to deplore that there is no parallel convenience for the assistance of perplexed understandings.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding, and an Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Engravings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, sculpture, painting, &c.—notices of the drama and other amusements—translations from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those desirous of commencing their subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the direction of Epes Sargent, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from Messrs. Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a host of the accomplished writers, now in the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volumie, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume: and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry or expense, shall be spared to render it as high, graceful, and agreeable melange of elegantliterature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our old and gentle countrywomen, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a line of matter of a character that would bring a blush on the cheek of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel types. It is published once every three months, with a splendid super-royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an exquisitely Engraved Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is the earliest and the cheapest weekly miscellany residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers to be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries—and, at present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

Terms.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in an elevated, pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of Colleges, and to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as their will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
" Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00
Collegiate Studies,	10.00
Modern Languages an extra charge.

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, sedimary fuel and lights. Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER, } Associate
HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass., Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 35 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ATI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proced from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved tc be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevcis, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, 'Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Piles, and in all cases in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to the human disease, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended, especially for sacrades worms which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or diapepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work:

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work by Dr. Jenks. The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. Its a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. We indeed a specially good work, which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—Its well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Student will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

POETICAL.

From the Providence Journal.

Bennington.

When I about those Vineyard girls
Breathed forth a simple strain,
Last summer you may recollect
You made me sing again.
I take it the hint—it is not mine
To "build the lofty rime:"
But I would tell, in simple phrase,
A tale of olden time.

Up through a cloudy sky, the sun
Was buffeting his way,
On such a morn as ushers in
A sultry August day.
Hot was the air, and hotter yet
Men's hearts within them grew:
They Britons, Hessians, Tories saw—
They saw their homesteads too.

They thought of all their country's wrongs,
They thought of noble lives,
Poured out in battle with her foes,
They thought upon their wives,
Their children and their aged sires—
Their firesides,—churches,—God;
And the deep thought made hallowed ground,
Each foot of soil they trod.

Their leader was a brave, bold man—
A man of earnest will,—
His very presence was a host,
He'd fought at Bunker Hill.
A living monument he stood
Of stirring deeds of fame—
Of deeds that shed a fadeless night
On his own deathless name.

Of Charlestown's flames—of Warren's blood,
His presence told the tale,—
It made the heroes' hearts beat high
Though lips and cheeks grew pale.
It spoke of Princeton, Morristown—
Told Trenton's noble story:
It lit futurity with hope
And on the past shed glory.

Who were those men—their leader, who?
Where stood they on that morn?
The men were Berkshire yeomanry,
Brave men as e'er were born:
Who in the resagent penury row,
Or warrior rank could stand;
Rlubt worthy such a gallant troop,
JOHN STARK led on the band.

Wolamasac wanders by the spot
Where they that morning stood;
Then rolled the war cloud o'er the stream,
The waves were tinged with blood;
And the near hills that dark cloud girt,
And fires like lightning flashed:
And shrieks and groans, like howling blasts,
Rose as the bayonets clashed.

The night before, the Yankee host
Came gathering from afar,
And in each belted bosom glowed
The spirit of the war:
All full of fight, through rainy storm,
Night cloudy, starless, dark,
They came, and gathered as they came
Around the valiant Stark.

There was a Berkshire parson—he
And all his flock were there,
And like true churchmen militant
The arm of flesh made bare,

"Out spake the Dominie and said,—
"For battle are we come,
These many times, and after this
We mean to stay at home.

If we are come in vain;"—said Stark,—
"What! will ye go to night
To battle it with yonder troops?
God send us morning light
And we will give you work enough;
Let but the morning come,
And, if you hear no voice of war,
Go back and stay at home.

The morning came—there stood the foe,—
Stark eyed them as they stood;
Few words he spake, 'twas not a time
For moralising mood.
"See there the enemy, my boys!
Now, strong in valour's might,
Beat them, or Molly Stark must sleep
In widowhood to night."

Each soldier there had left at home
A sweetheart, wife or mother,
A blooming sister, or perchance
A fair haired, blue eyed brother.
Each from a fire-side came, and thoughts
Those simple words awoke;
That nerved up every hero's arm
And guided every stroke.

Oh! fearful wantonness of war!
It mocks at widows' tears,
Frowns on the orphaned infant's wail
And mocks at mortal fears.
It is the tyrant's minister—
The robbers of the world
Have done their deeds of darkness where
The war cloud thickest curled.

But where the invader's tramp is heard
When, rushing on the gale,
The slogan of defiance comes
Shall freemen's spirit quail?
No,—each to rank, and hand to hand,
Quick let them meet the foe,
And to the God of battles trust
Their country's weal or woe.

Thus did the Berkshire men that day:
Scarce had he spoke the words,
When burst the muskets' rattling peal,
Out leaped the flashing swords;
And when brave Stark in after time,
Told the proud tale of wonder,
He said the battle din was "one
Continual clap of thunder."

Two hours they strove;—then victory crowned
The gallant Yankee boys;
Nought but the memory of the dead
Bedimmed their glorious joys.
Aye! "there's the rub"—the hour of strife,
Though follow years of fame,
Is still in mournful memory linked
With some death-hallowed name.

The cypress with the laurel twines,
The pean sounds a knell,
The trophied column marks the spot
Where friends sod brothers fell.
Fame's mantle, a funereal pall,
Seems to the grief-dimmed eye,—
For, ever, where the bravest fall,
The best beloved die.

* * * * * * *

Wollamsac's waves are bloodless now,
The hills no war cloud girds,
No death shriek now the echo wakes,
But screams of startled birds
Break on the sportsman's ear,—the sights,
The sounds are all of peace:
Soon may her gentle reign o'er earth
Extend and never cease. RAMOND.

Providence, Jan. 1838.

* I have taken the words of the person, and the words of Stark, with scarcely any variation, from Sparks' Biography.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Singular Loss Affair.—The Delaware Gazette tells a good story of two persons saved from the wreck of the Pulaski, which we will endeavor to repeat in a few words:—

Among the passengers was Mr. Ridge a young man of wealth and standing, from New Orleans, who being a stranger to all on board, and feeling quite as much interest in his own safety as in that of any other person, was, in the midst of the confusion which followed the dreadful catastrophe about helping himself to a place in one of the boats, when a young lady who had frequently solicited his admiration during the voyage, but with whom he was totally unacquainted, attracted his attention, and he immediately stepped forward to offer his services, and to assist her on board the boat; but in his generous attempt not only lost sight of the young lady, but also lost his place in the boat. Afterwards when he discovered that the part of the wreck on which he floated would soon go down, he cast about for the means of preservation, and lashed together a couple of settees and an empty cask he sprang it and launched himself upon the wide ocean.

His vessel proved better than he expected, and amidst the shrieks, groans, and death struggles which were every where uttered around him he began to feel that his lot was fortunate; and was consoling himself upon his escape, such as it was, when a person struggling in the waves very near him caught his eye. It was a woman, and without taking the second thought he plunged into the water, and brought her safely to his little raft which was barely sufficient to keep their heads and shoulders above water. She was the same young lady for whom he had lost his chance in the boat. Fortunately they drifted upon a part of the wreck which furnished them with materials for strengthening their vessel, and which was turned to such good account that they soon sat upon a float sufficiently buoyant to keep them above the water, and when the morning dawned they found themselves upon the broad surface of the "vasty deep" without land or sail or human being in sight without a morsel to eat or drink, almost without clothes, and exposed to the burning heat of a tropical sun.

In the course of the next day they came in sight of land and for a time had strong hopes of reaching it, but during the succeeding night the wind drove them back upon the ocean. On the third day a sail was seen in the distance, but they had no means of making themselves discovered. They were, however, at last picked up by a vessel after several days of intense suffering, starved and exhausted.

Women are the best creatures in the world, and it is not to be expected that Miss Onslow (such was the lady's name) could resist the substantial evidences of affection which her companion had given, and accordingly they entered into "an alliance offensive and defensive," as the statesmen say, which has since been renewed up, on "terra firma," and is ere long to be signed and sealed.

On reaching the shore and recovering some what from the effects of the voyage, Mr. Ridge thinking that perhaps his lady love had entered into the engagement without proper consideration and that the sight of land and old friends might have caused her to change her views—waited on her and informed her that if such was the case he would not hesitate to release her from the engagement, and added further that he had lost his all by the wreck of the Pulaski, and would henceforth be entirely dependent on his own exertions for subsistence. The lady was much affected, and bursting into tears, assured him her affection was unchangeable, and as to fortunes she was happy to say that she had enough for both. She is said to be worth two hundred thousand dollars. —Brooklyn Adv.

Hints to Young People.—No. 11.

SEEK KNOWLEDGE.

Knowledge is the aliment of the mind. Ignorance is to the mind what poverty and want are to the body. It is a state of privation, and in the present and degenerate and fallen state of man is connected with mental disease. And as the want of bodily nourishment aggravates certain bodily diseases, so ignorance commonly aggravates the disease of the mind.

Geologists have found remains of animals in the rocks and earths, of those regions where the animals must have lived and died. And having ascertained the structure of the animal by the shape and mutual connection of its bones, they are able to determine with sufficient certainty, the animal's manner of life, its propensities for land or water, the substances it fed on, and its general dispositions and habits. But such indications of the nature of a race of animals are not more decisive than the evidences from the faculties and structure of the human mind, that man was made to seek knowledge.

Why have you the power of perception, but that you may discern those articles of knowledge, which the mind is designed to receive, and on which it is to live. This faculty of perception is the mouth of the mind, through which all sustenance of the intellectual system is to be received. And if this faculty is not properly used, the mind can never continue in a thriving, healthy state.

Why have you the power of reflection? This is the mind's organ of digestion. It prepares the knowledge for use. It must be constantly applied or it contracts disease, and becomes a sense of torment, and an instrument of death. But when supplied with suitable employment it is the great source of health to the system. The proper exercise is delightful itself, as well as in its results, but there is not a more wretched and useless being in the world than the mental dyspeptic, whose power of reflection is not constantly and healthfully occupied upon articles of useful knowledge.

And let me here offer one hint more. Youthful reader, the use which you make of the few years of your life which are now passing away, is to determine whether your intellectual growth shall be thrifty and expansive, or stinted and dwarfish; you may do yourself great and permanent damage, by the neglect or the bad treatment of your mind at this stage of your life. If you turn away now from fields of useful knowledge, you will bring on a mental barrenness which will last to your dying day. One pinch of intellectual famine now, will leave indelible marks upon you.

Now is the time for you to enjoy the acquisition of knowledge. If you have no appetite for knowledge, it is easier to create one now, than it will ever be again. All appetites whether bodily or mental, are formed with peculiar facility in youth. If you have an appetite for knowledge, you will never be able to indulge it hereafter with so keen a relish as you may now. The lively and prying curiosity of youth seldom goes with us into maturer years. And if it did, one half the pleasure of acquiring knowledge in advanced life, is destroyed by the thought that it is too late to make any profitable use of the knowledge we acquire. Now you can lay up a fund of knowledge with the chance of a long life before you, to use and enjoy it. Old people frequently lay up knowledge with some such feelings as they lay up money; a constant regret that they must leave all soon, and have so little opportunity to use what they have gained for the benefit of themselves and others.

CHARLES CRAYON.

The Power of Steam.—Strange that there should slumber, in yonder tranquil pond, a power so tremendous, that could we condense and direct its energies, it might cleave the solid earth in twain, and yet so gentle, that it may be governed and applied, and set to perform its stupendous miracles, by a child. The discovery that water would resist being boiled over two hundred and twelve degrees, has conferred upon England its manufacturing supremacy, and will eventually produce changes, both moral and physical, of which it is difficult to limit the extent. One bushel of coals properly consumed, will raise seventy millions of pounds a foot high. The Menai bridge, weighing four millions of pounds, suspended at a medium height of 120 feet, might have been raised where it is by 7 bushels of coal. M. Dupin estimates the steam engines of England to possess a moving power equivalent to that of 6,400,000 men at the windlass. And this stupendous agent is at present only in its infancy.

Saving Trouble.—A N. H. farmer going to parish meeting met the Clergyman, and told him they were going to raise his salary, (which was a very mean one,) to which he drily said, "I beg you wouldn't, I find it so hard to get the little you vote, that if you vote any more, I am afraid I shall have no time to do any thing else.

It is said (says the Louisville Journal) that Col Bowie, the inventor of the Bowie knife, has two beautiful and accomplished daughters, who can bring down the deer in his swiftest flight, and hit the boss of the target at every shot.—How would some of the sweet city exquisites of our country relish such women for wives?

A western editor hearing that Talleyrand died at his own hotel, inferred from thence that he was a tavern keeper.

How to pay for a Farm.—A man in the town of D——, some twenty years ago, went to merchant in Portsmouth, N. H. who was also President of a Bank and stated that he lived on a farm, the home of his fathers, which had descended to him by right of inheritance; that this, his only property worth two thousand dollars, was mortgaged for one thousand, to a merciless creditor and that the time of redemption would be out in a week. He closed by asking for a loan to the amount of his debt, for which he offered to mortgage his farm.

Mer. I have no money to spare; and if I could relieve you now, a similar difficulty would probably arise in a year or two.

Far. No, I would make every exertion; I think I could clear it.

Mer. Well, if you will obey my directions, I can put you in a way to get the money; but it will require the greatest prudence and resolution. If you can get a good endorser on a note, you shall have money from the bank; and you can mortgage your farm to the endorser, for his security. You must pay in one hundred dollars every sixty days. Can you do it?

Far. I can get Mr.——for endorser, and I can raise the hundred dollars for every payment but the first.

Mer. Then borrow a hundred dollars more than you want, and let it lie in a bank: you will lose only one dollar interest. But mind—you must spend nothing—buy nothing.

He departed,—the note was discounted, and the payments punctually made. In something more than two years, he came into the store of of the merchant and exclaimed "I am a free man—I dont owe any one ten dollars—but look at me. He was embrowned with labor, and his clothes from head to foot were a issue of darns and patches. "So you have cleared your farm?" said the merchant. "Yes, answered he, "and now I know how to get another."

Thus good advice well improved, rescued a family from poverty, and put them in possession of a competency which we believe they yet live to enjoy. Thus may any one retrieve a falling fortune if he will. And by using the same amount of self-denial and by making as great exertions in the way to heaven, we may secure an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away."

The Veil of the Future.—Thou standest before the mighty veil which shrouds eternity, and asketh, Is it a veil of mourning or that of rejoicing; that of a murderer or a beauty? that of a radiant visage, like Moses's, or that of a corpse? I answer, thou wilt one day lift it, and such as thy heart has deserved, such will thou lift.

A few weeks since, the Wheeling Va. Gazette copied a forcible article on the advantages of advertising, from an English periodical. It has elicited the following acknowlengment, from a business man of that city, of the benefits of advertising:

Mr. Editor—I perceived in the Times a few days since, an article on advertising. It led me to make an examination, and I now give you the result. The firm to which I belong has been in existence a number of years, and has done during a tolerably fair business. On the first of January last we commenced advertising by the year in your paper. In the half year ending July 1st 1838, our sales have been nearly a third greater

A chap calling himself Reuben Hill, recommends a quack nostrum known as "Dyspeptic cordial," which, as he says, cured himself of the rheumatism, his wife of Sick headache, his daughter of fever and ague, and his mother of a bad cough, besides mending the cellar stairs, and putting the baby to sleep!

According to the New Orleans Picayune there is in that city a young fop who feels so tight that it takes two ladies to see him, and then they cant without the aid of a microscope: and also a man so ugly in his looks, that his own shadow wont follow him.

Time is a ceaseless dropping away of moments which fall and disappear, while the future hangs unchanged on high, and the past is ever growing below, and increases the more, the farther it recedes. What, then, remains to us? I answer, the present; fast as time may fly by, the present is our eternity, and never deserts us.

Virtues of a Cow Hide.—Jonathan.—"Hallo! neighbor, what be ya gwoyn two dew with that air knowhide?"

"Yes, answered he, "and now I know how to get another."

Thus good advice well improved, rescued a family from poverty, and put them in possession of a competency which we believe they yet live to enjoy. Thus may any one retrieve a falling fortune if he will. And by using the same amount of self-denial and by making as great exertions in the way to heaven, we may secure an "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fadeth not away."

The Veil of the Future.—Thou standest before the mighty veil which shrouds eternity, and asketh, Is it a veil of mourning or that of rejoicing; that of a murderer or a beauty? that of a radiant visage, like Moses's, or that of a corpse? I answer, thou wilt one day lift it, and such as thy heart has deserved, such will thou lift.

A few weeks since, the Wheeling Va. Gazette copied a forcible article on the advantages of advertising, from an English periodical. It has elicited the following acknowlengment, from a business man of that city, of the benefits of advertising:

Mr. Editor—I perceived in the Times a few days since, an article on advertising. It led me to make an examination, and I now give you the result. The firm to which I belong has been in existence a number of years, and has done during a tolerably fair business. On the first of January last we commenced advertising by the year in your paper. In the half year ending July 1st 1838, our sales have been nearly a third greater

A cheap calling himself Reuben Hill, recommends a quack nostrum known as "Dyspeptic cordial," which, as he says, cured himself of the rheumatism, his wife of Sick headache, his daughter of fever and ague, and his mother of a bad cough, besides mending the cellar stairs, and putting the baby to sleep!

According to the New Orleans Picayune there is in that city a young fop who feels so tight that it takes two ladies to see him, and then they cant without the aid of a microscope: and also a man so ugly in his looks, that his own shadow wont follow him.

Time is a ceaseless dropping away of moments which fall and disappear, while the future hangs unchanged on high, and the past is ever growing below, and increases the more, the farther it recedes. What, then, remains to us? I answer, the present; fast as time may fly by, the present is our eternity, and never deserts us.

How to pay for a Farm.—A man in the town of D——, some twenty years ago, went to merchant in Portsmouth, N. H. who was also President of a Bank and stated that he lived on a farm, the home of his fathers, which had descended to him by right of inheritance; that this, his only property worth two thousand dollars, was mortgaged for one thousand, to a merciless creditor and that the time of redemption would be out in a week. He closed by asking for a loan to the amount of his debt, for which he offered to mortgage his farm.

Mer. I have no money to spare; and if I could relieve you now, a similar difficulty would probably arise in a year or two.

Far. No, I would make every exertion; I think I could clear it.

Mer. Well, if you will obey my directions, I can put you in a way to get the money; but it will require the greatest prudence and resolution. If you can get a good endorser on a note, you shall have money from the bank; and you can mortgage your farm to the endorser, for his security. You must pay in one hundred dollars every sixty days. Can you do it?

Far. I can get Mr.——for endorser, and I can raise the hundred dollars for every payment but the first.

Mer. Then borrow a hundred dollars more than you want, and let it lie in a bank: you will lose only one dollar interest. But mind—you must spend nothing—buy nothing.

He departed,—the note was discounted, and the payments punctually made. In something more than two years, he came into the store of of the merchant and exclaimed "I am a free man—I dont owe any one ten dollars—but look at me. He was embrowned with labor, and his clothes from head to foot were a issue of darns and patches. "So you have cleared your farm?" said the merchant. "Yes, answered he, "and now I know how to get another."

Christian Principle.—A slave in one of the islands of the West Indies, who had originally come from Africa, having been brought under the influence of religious instruction, became singularly valuable to his owner, on account of his integrity and general good conduct. After some time, his master raised him to a situation of some consequence in the management of his estate; and on the occasion, wishing to purchase twenty additional slaves, employed him to make the selection, giving him instruction to choose those who were strong and likely to make good workmen. The man went to the slave market, and commenced his selection. He had not long surveyed the multitude offered for sale, before he fixed his eye intently upon one old and decrepit slave, and told his master that he must be one. The master appearec greatly surprised at his choice, and remonstrated against it. The poor fellow begged that he might be indulged; when the dealer remarked, that if they were about to buy twenty, he would give them the old man in the bargain. The purchase was accordingly made, and the slaves were conducted to the habitation of their new master; but upon none of the others, bestow half the attention and care he did upon the poor, old, decrepit African. He took him to his own habitation, and laid him upon his own bed: he fed him at his own table, and gave him drink out of his own cup; when he was cold, he carried him into the sunshine; and when he was hot he placed him under the shade of the cocoanut trees. Astonished at the attention of this confidential slave to a fellow slave, his master questioned him upon the subject. He said, you would not take an interest in the old man, but for some special reason; he is a relation of yours perhaps your father." "No," answered the poor fellow; "he no father." "He is then an elder brother." "No, massa, he no my brother." "Then is he an uncle, or some other relation?" "No, massa—he no be of my kindred at all, nor even my friend." "Then," asked his master, "on what account does he excite your interest?" "He my enemy, massa," replied the slave; "he sold me to the slave dealer; and my Bible tell me, when my enemy hunger, feed him; and when he thirst, give him drink."—Col. Chris. Obs.

From J. R. Stone's Address, on the Bible.

1. The Bible is the most ancient book. It gives the knowledge of events far more remote than any other history extant.

2. It is a book of facts more important than any other ever that ever happened.

3. It is a book of literature, the most remarkable which the world has ever witnessed, considered even in every human composition. Its histories and biographies are remarkable for their conciseness, perspicuity and interest; its narratives and descriptions are true to nature, and full of animation; its poetry is beautiful and sublime beyond a parallel; its eloquence is powerful and persuasive; its style is infinitely varied and inimitable; its pathos is most affecting; and its devotional strains carry one above the trifles and vanities of earth.

4. The Bible is a book of philosophy. Not a book of definitions and theories, but of practical philosophy. The bible knows what men are made of, enters into his inmost soul, and finds him out. It makes a man feel that his Master and Teacher sees through him, and knows all his thoughts and his character.

5. It is a book of thought.

6. It is a book of the Spirit. The books were indited and the authors were moved and controlled by the Spirit; and the Spirit still is the companion of all who obey the truth.

7. It is a book of power. It has an influence on man surpassing that of any other book,—yea, that of all other books. This leads us to speak of the chief excellence of the Bible, viz. its influench on the Operations of the mind. Its tendency and aim is to regenerate the mind, to cure it of sin, and make it holy. It acts on the reasoning powers by correcting first principles. It kills the spirit of sophistry, by which self, client, or sect, or party is to be secured, rather than righteousness or God. It stimulates to self inquiry and finally it promotes the enlargement of the whole man By familiarity with great and noble objects, the mind is assimilated and rendered expansive, pure and holy.—Evangelist.

The Disowned Lamb.—In one of my morning walks, I met a lad carrying in his arms a disconsolate looking little lamb. I inquired, John, what is the matter with that lamb? With a cadence expressive of commiseration and tenderness, he replied, "Its mother will not own it." I felt sorry for the poor little creature, and was indulging my sympathies in his behalf, when suddenly my thoughts took another turn—even towards the thousands of disowned children, who sink in despondency, or cry in the bitterness of their souls, because their unfeeling parents utterly neglect them. In the midst of this association of ideas, that impressive passage in Isaiah, 49th chapter, was called to mind—" Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? Yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee on the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me." It was also natural to think of Isa. xl. 11.—" He shall feed his flock like a shepherd; he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom Our Savior encourages us to obtain instruction from the lilies of the field, from the fowls of the air, and from the lambs of the fold. The most common-place events may suggest to us delightful reflections. Our most profitable thoughts may thus have their origin. If we would always be ready to cherish such suggestions, we should never be destitute of food for the mind. In this way we have access to nature's vast library.—Ib.

The Norfolk Herald recommends that the duty on foreign potatoes be taken off 12months, because of the failure of that crop in this country.

The Upper Mississippi is said to be higher than it was ever before known to be.

Eggs and Poultry—useful facts.—Among all nations, and throughout all grades of society, eggs have been a favorite food. But in all our cities, and particularly in winter, they are held at such prices that few families can afford to use them at all; and even those who are in easy circumstances, consider them too expensive for common food.

There is no need of this. Every family, or nearly every family can, with very little trouble have eggs in plenty during the whole year; and of all the animals domesticated for the use of man the common dunghill fowl is capable of yielding the greatest possible profit to the owner.

In the month of November I put apart eleven hens and cock, gave them a small chamber in a woodhouse, defended from storms, and with an opening to the south. Their food, water, and lime, were placed on shelves convenient for them, with warm nests and chalk nest eggs in plenty. These hens continued to lay eggs through the winter. From these eleven hens I received an average of six eggs daily through the winter; and whenever any one of them was disposed to set, viz. as soon as she began to cluck, she was separated from the others by a grand partition, and her apartment darkened; these cluckers were well attended and well fed; they could see and partially associate through their grates with the other hens, but as soon as any one of these prisoners began to sing, was released, and would very soon lay eggs. It is a pleasant recreation to feed and tend a bevy of laying hens, they may be tamed so as to follow the children, and will lay in any box.

Egg shells contain lime, and in winter, when the earth is bound with frost, or covered with snow, if lime is not provided for them, they will not lay, or if they do, the egg must of necessity be without shells. Old rubbish lime, from old chimneys and old buildings, is proper, and only needs to be broken for them. They will often attempt to swallow pieces of lime plaster as large as walnuts.

I have often heard it said that wheat is the best grain for them, but I doubt it; they will sing over Indian corn with more animation than over any other grain. The singing hen will certainly lay eggs if she finds all things agreeable to her; but the hen is made a pride, as watchful as a weasel, and as fastidious as a hypocrite; she must, she will have secrecy and mystery about her nest; all eyes but her own must be averted; follow her or watch her, and she will forsake her nest, and stop laying; she is best pleased with a box covered at top, with a backside aperture for light, and a side a side door by which she can escape unseen.

A farmer may keep an hundred fowls in his barn, may suffer them to trample upon and destroy his mows of wheat, and other grains and still have fewer eggs than the cottager who keeps a single dozen, who provides secret nests chalk eggs, pounded brick, plenty of Indian corn, lime, water, and gravel for them; and who takes care that his hens are not disturbed about their nests. Three chalk eggs in a nest are better than a single nest egg, and large eggs please them; I have often smiled to see them fondle round and lay into a nest of good eggs. Pullets will commence laying earlier in life where nests and eggs are plenty, and where other hens are cackling around them.

A dozen dunghill fowls, shut up away from other means of obtaining food, will require something more than a quart of Indian corn a day; I think fifteen bushels a year a fair provision for them. But more or less let them always have enough by them; and after they have become habituated to find enough at all times a plenty in their little manger, they take but a few kernels at a time except just before retiring to rest; when they will take nearly a spoonful into their crops: but just so sure as their provision comes to them scanted or irregular, so surely they will ravey up a whole crop full at a time and will stop laying.

A single dozen fowls, properly attended, will furnish a family with more than 2,000 eggs in a year, and 100 full grown chickens for fall and winter stores. The expense of feeding the dozen fowls will not amount to eighteen bushels of Indian corn. They may be kept in cities as well as in the country, and will do as well shut up the year round as to run at large, and a grated room well lighted, 10 feet by 5, partitioned from any stable or other out house, is sufficient for the dozen fowls, with their roosting place, nests and feeding troughs.

Scarcity of wives in Texas.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, writing from Texas under date of 25th July, says;

"Our congress has passed a law,—granting a bonus of two thirds of a league, or 2,962 acres of good land, to any woman who will marry during the present year, any citizen of this Republic who was such at the time of our declaration of Independence. The consequence you may easily imagine. Every single lady, old or young, good looking or ugly, has been sought out and led to the alter; and yet nineteen out of twenty of our bachelors are not only unmarried, but unengaged, altho' their dispositions are the best that can be imagined, and their efforts correspondingly.

"A few weeks since a family arrived from Ohio, bringing with them a young woman as a servant. Our young men took it very much in dudgeon that so precious a commodity should remain in a situation so unbecoming and unprofitable, and accordingly held a meeting, at which a considerable sum of money was raised by subscription, with which the young damsel was placed as a boarder in a respectable family. Then they scribbled together, and bought a young man's head right of 1,476,481 acres, which they presented to her as a dower; and this evening she was married to a respectable planter, who receives with her the 2,962 acres in addition from the Government.'

Wabash Canal.—The Wabash and canal now in progress is to reach from Manhattan, at the mouth of Maumee river river, to Terre Haute, on the Wabash 212 miles; thence by a crescent, 24 miles, to Central Canal, and down the southern section of that 110 miles to Evansville, on the Ohio river, in the south western part of Indiana, making a total distance of 444 miles. The summit level, about 2000 feet above Lake Erie, is at fort Wayne. One hundred and ten miles of this canal of this canal west of Fort Wayne are ready for navigation. One hundred and six miles eastward from fort Wayne to Manhattan its termination are under contract, partly made and to be completed by October 1, 1839.

Description of Cincinnati.—A tailor living in Cincinnati, in writing home to his friends in England, used the following language; "I never saw a more healthy place; wages are good; laborers get two or dollars a week; tradesmen get twelve dollars a week, a man with a small family can live well upon three dollars a week. Let me press you to come out; don't be afraid you will do well here; eggs are twelve dozen for a dollar, flour 4½ dollars a barrel, 196 lbs; fowls fine large one, shilling each; beef 4 cents a pound, whiskey 4 shillings a gallon."

The last item explains why it is that the mechanics in Cincinnati, with all the high prices of wages and low cost of living above detailed, are in reality in not a bit better condition than are those of any other city in the Union.

The Lakes and the Mississippi united.—We find in one of our exchange papers the following brief notice of one of the most remarkable improvements in the world—no less than the union of the great northern Lakes with Mississippi, by an artificial navigation of only 909 rods in length. Rock river is a tributary of lake Michigan, and empties into the head of Green Bay; the Wisconsin flows south west to the Mississippi. They are both navigable streams at the point where they make so near an approach to each other "Wisconsin and Fox rivers are to be united by a canal 802 rods in length, in width 56 feet at the bottom and 70 at the top, and 7 feet in depth. Contracts were to have been let at Green Bay on the 5th inst. by Daniel Whitney Esq., President of the Company."

Destruction by the rise of the Lakes.—A letter from Amherstburg (U. C.) in the New York Commercial Advertiser, gives the following important facts—

In this county thousands of acres are overflowed, and what, a few years since, were fruitful fields, and highly cultivated farms, are now an expanse of water; and boats pass over what was the public road within two years. Farmers have been, and are now daily, compelled to remove from their old habitations to some place more elevated, leaving every thing but their furniture behind them. In many places the water is up to the second story, in others a top rail of the fence may be seen.

On the Detroit river I saw yesterday a family removing from a large public house, which had been a fashionable resort, until within a few days The banks of the Thames, which five years ago were five feet above the high water mark, are now even with the water. At one place a mill which cost twenty thousand dollars has been washed away. At Raleigh, Tilburry, &c. the inhabitants on the rivers have had to retire back upon some more elevated spot, leaving their crops dwellings &c. In one town I saw the French church surrounded by water; and the lighthouse at the mouth of the Thames, which a few years since was on a fine farm, looks now very like the Eddystone light in the English channel.

Newspaper Profits.—General Duff Green late of the United States Telegraph, has published a statement, of the amount due to him from delinquent subscribers in the States and Territories of the Union. The sum total is fifty-five thousand six hundred, of which two thousand and eighty seven dollars, are due from the state of New York The is an enormous amount of arrearages, but the fact is, it is the only result to be expected from the manner in which the business of printing newspapers is carried on in this country. The system of unlimited credit in all directions, to subscribers, leaving it in reality almost entirely to their integrity and sense of justice whether any thing is paid, is sure to be attended with a heavy and unavoidable loss. The proprietors of newspaper establishments, out of the large cities, will never realize their just profits, until the custom of exacting payment in advance becomes generally and rigidly enforced.—Albany Daily.

Franking Privilege.—The members of the English Parliament beat our Congressmen all hollow in the use of this privilege. The Westminster Review states that one of them lately franked a fine piano-forte to one of his fair cousins. Amos has never had to carry such a load as this. Senator Morris' bags of wheat are no comparison.

Scalling Wheels.—The New York correspondent of the Boston Atlas, gives the following interesting description of the new mode of propelling steamboats;

I have seen a model of a late invention for propelling ships by our Consul at Liverpool. It is on the principle of the scull. It is well known that a boat of similar size and build, with one rowed by four men, can be sculled by one oar as fast as the latter can be propelled. If, then, you can bring the power of four men to bear upon the sculling oar, you must go four times as fast, beting the additional resistence that is brought into play by the increased speed of the body through the water. This invention will break up the present system of wheel paddling and its enormous engines in toto. The sculling wheels are placed under the water, on either side of the vessel near the stern. There will be no further use for a rudder is thought it may be retained. The whole machinery is driven by two small engines about the size of those used on railroad locomotives. The invention is to be applied to the ship Star on her next trip to Liverpool, she having been purchased for that purpose by her indefatigable commander, Capt. Glover. By this invention a degree of resistence is obtained in the water that no paddle wheel can ever be brought to exercise Mark my prediction. This discovery will entirely supercede the present system of propelling vessels by immense paddle wheels and huge engines. The construction of the scull wheel is such that it offers no impediment to the motion of the vessel, even if the machinery be not in motion. I have seen it all,—and all I have to say to Americans is, wait till the Star be fitted up before you engage in steam navigation across the Atlantic

A learned expounder of the Mosaic says: It is desirable, for it was, before he enters upon a work of importance and making, to consult the intelligent persons among the particular friends: let him consult each of them twice; or if he has not more than one friend, he should consult him ten times, at ten different visits; if he has not one to consult let him return at his wife and consult her twice; and if she is not at hand, let him do it to the contrary; so shall he proceed rigbly in his affairs, and attain his object.

Advantages of Steam.—As the morning train of the Long Island Railroad was coming down on Thursday last, along Formentier's Garden, a child about 5 years old, son of Mr. McGorge, living in the Garden House, crawled suddenly up the bank and seated itself upon the iron rail of the track. When the locomotive was within fifteen yards, the engineer instantly reversed the action of the engine, and passed the signal of danger to the several "breakmen" upon the cars and they so far checked the momentum of the entire train, that as it reached the child, it was swept gently from the track by the brooms placed at front, and was not hurt.—The child was totally unconscious of danger, and made no effort to get out of the way. It has ever been evident that with proper care steam is the safest mode of travelling, and it is a gratifying attestation to see instances of the preservation of life by the careful and judicious use of its tremendous power. Humanity has long enough shuddered at its reckless use. In the instance above related had the train been moving with horses, probably no manuel power would have been sufficient to have checked the cars in the same space.—L. I. Star.

The following toast was given at Detroit on the glorious Fourth:—"The Boston Tea Party—unlike most tea parties little was said but a great deal was done." Good!

HOAX.—Whoever has seen a fish smack about have noticed the well for keeping the fish; it is caulked around the sides, but the bottom is full of holes to keep the water in circulation for the fish. An ambitious loafer, on Thursday applied on board of one of these crafts and began to haul her out for seventy five cents. He stripped off for the job and for an hour and a half the admiring crowd were amused by his marvellous efforts to haul out the well, till he gave up the job in despair.—Provt. Jour.

New Definition.—Our old friend Harland, being asked the definition of Syntax, (sin tax,) replied that it was the money a man paid for liquor.

The Ruling passions.—A merchant who had escaped from his ledger to catch a breath of air at Saratoga, being unable to drive from his mind the long familiar subjects of dollars and cents, writes to his partner—"the village is very much crowded: the number of visitors present is estimated at $3000. '—Prov. Jour.

The Globe of Tuesday night, speaking of Mr. Clay, exclaims; "How a man, indeed can manage to keep himself prominent in the public eye, with so little intellectual capital, is a curious problem."

The Globe is a most modest paper. Mr Clay's reputation of forty years standing is thus summarily disposed of by a man, who not many years ago, was his most devoted sycophantic admirer.

Letter upon our Country.—Sir Frances Head, having returned to London from Canada, is addressing a series of letters to Lord Brougham. The following scandalous exaggerations are specimens of his representations of the U. S.

In several of the states every male inhabitant from the age of fourteen to sixty, carries in his bosom a bowie knife, to enable him to be judge, jury, and executioner of his own law.

The American people are, by nature, no more addicted to the crime of assassination than we are but they are driven to commit upon murder, because their laws have not sufficient power to protect them.

My Lord I entertain no unkind feeling towards the American people: on the contrary, I admire their energy, their intelligence and their industry, but I openly detest their Government, because it is tyranny—because it has been productive of guilt—because it fails to protect life or property—and lastly, because it has either no power or no will to maintain its treaties with its allies.

I have reason to assure your Lordship, that the people of property in the United States secretly detest their Republican Government as much as I do; and they do not hesitate when they are out of hearing of the people, to avow, in strong language, their desire to see, by some legal and quiet excitement, of elective institutions, framed for the purpose of constituting a Government, which, deating upon the will of the people, is without anchorage, and which, whenever the popular storm rages, proves to be, in fact, no Government at all.

Kanawha Valley.—The valley of Kanawha, so justly celebrated for the fertility of its fields and the bold and romantic character of its natural scenery, appears to have escaped the drought which has burnt up so many agricultural districts of the country. The Valley about 100 miles in extent, is said to be blessed as usual, with fine crops. An unusual quantity of corn was this year planted, and although it may fall short of what some seasons would have produced, still the crop will be abundant and good. France and Germany, (adds the Enquirer, from which we derive the information,) may boast of the Rhine—but to Western Virginia alone belongs the "Valley of Kanawha."

Mode of settling on Prairies.—The first improvements are usually made on that part of the prairie that adjoins the timber; and thus we may see at the commencement, a range of farms circumscribing the entire prairie with a belt. The burning of the prairie is then stopped the whole distance of the circuit, in the neighborhood of these farms, to prevent injury to the fences and other improvements. This is done by ploughing two or three furrows all around the settlement. In a short time the timber springs up spontaneously on all the parts not burnt, and the groves and forests commence a gradual encroachment on the adjacent prairies. In breaking up prairie land, &c. for cultivation, they usually plough with three or four yoke of oxen; the shear plough turning up about eighteen to twenty four inches of turf at a furrow in breadth, and from three to four inches deep, the sod turning entirely over, so as to lay the grass down, and it fits furrow to furrow so closely enough to form a uniform sod sow wheat. It is usual to break it up in May, and drop corn along the edge of every fourth furrow. This is called sod corn. No working or ploughing is necessary the first season. The sod is left lying for the grass to decay; and after the next winters frost, it crumbles and becomes light and friable. The sod does not make more than half a crop, and is cut up, stalk and all together, and stacked up for fodder for stock. The next year the crop of corn is most abundant, averging from 50 to 100 bushels per acre.

Anthracite Coal to England.—On Friday, July 20th, a trial was made of the use of Anthracite Coal as fuel for the locomotive on the Liverpool and Manchester rail way. The result was higly satisfactory: the engine doing the same duty both as to speed and force as when coke is used. The saving is estimated from thirty to forty per cent in coast and quantity. A Liverpool paper states that the claim for our country the exclusive production of this coal, but that coal fields of Wales contain stores of Anthricite superior to any American specimens ever seen in England, and that it can be mined at smaller cost.

Rules for making cooking, and eating Corne pudding.—Gather ye corne in ye milke, when neither too younge nor too ripe. Shell, cut, or scrape ye corne from ye cob, and pound it fine with a heavy pestle. To three quarts of pour dozen eares, add one pint of milke, and a half of a pounde of sugar—the whole to be well mixt together, and baked about two houres, till ye crust shall shewe a darke browne complexion. It is to be eaten with fresh butter laide therein—to the which some adde a sprinkling of pepper. The additive doth not help the puddynge. Boyled corne puddins are softer, but not so goode.

Origin of our Statesmen.—America is said by a British writer, to be a 'Paradise of poor men.' A nobler tribute was never paid to any country. Our distinguished men have nearly all risen from poverty. Henry Clay was the son of a poor backwoods Baptist preacher—Daniel Webster of a New Hampshire farmer in very moderate circumstances. Gen. Jackson was an orphan at an early age, with nothing but his own exertions to aid him. President Van Buren was too poor in youth to obtain a tolerable education; and it has been thrown out as a reproach that he sold cabbage around the village of Kinderhook. If he did he should be proud rather than ashamed of it. Gov. Vance of Ohio, entered that State as a pioneer with an axe on his shoulder and very little in his pocket, and has been a plain farmer thro' life. Gov. Ritner of Pennsylvania, formerly drove a team as a waggoner from Philadelphia to Pittsburg. Many merchants in Philadelphia have his receipts for goods taken for transportation. His father's family for several generations had been weavers, both in Germany and in this country. Such examples as these (and they are frequent) must not be lost upon our youth who are apt to fancy that if they can't go to college, they have no chance for honorable distinction.—New Yorker.

Fire in the Mountains.—The Catoctin mountain, northwest of Frederick, was on fire on Sunday last. The excessive dryness of the leaves, grass and dead timber, caused it to burn with great violence and at night fall, on Sunday evening, it assumed a very threatening appearance. The smoke hung over the adjacent plains in a dense cloud, and the flames were visible for many miles. There are many wood cutter's houses scattered through the mountain and we fear that some of these and the humble improvements by which they are surrounded will be destroyed. These fires in the mountains occur almost every year, but the drought of the present season renders them unusually dangerous.

[Baltimore Chron.]

A Young Men's State Convention of the Administration party of Ohio was held at Newark, Licking Co. on the 17th ult. The usual two stories are told about it; but we make it a rule to beleive that of those who have the best right to know, and accordingly set down that there were five to eight thousand delegates present. J. W. Willey, Esq. of Cayahoga Co. was President. The proceedings were very spirited.

Fire at Elizabethtown.—On Saturday evening about half past 9 o'clock, the Rope Walk belonging to Mr. Julius F. Schul, was entirely destroyed by fire. Loss estimated at about $5,000—partially insured.

Opening of the Natchez Cotton Market.—On the 25th ultimo eight bales of Cotton were sent in from a planter in Adams county to Natchez, for sale. Before the cotton was one hour on hand it was sold at thirteen centsper pound. This was the first sale of any part of the new crop in that city.

Practical charity of the Shakers.—The United society of Shakers residing at New Lebanon, Hancock, &c., recently sent, for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Hudson, N. Y. twelve wagons loaded with provisions, beefs; clothing 46 sheep in the hoof, &c.

The Pittsburg Intelligencer, says that $3000 worth of Watermelons and Muskmelons alone are sold in that market every week. The sales of melons, vegetables, and fruit amount to $10,000 a week at this season of the year.

A sense of our ignorance, is the first step towards knowledge.

Late Elections.

Our remark last week, respecting the election in Missouri, though perhaps strictly true, was calculated to mislead. In the state legislature the whigs have gained several members, though the administration party have gained largely in the popular vote. The aggregate democratic majority in this election was about 7000, nearly double what it was before.

Maine.—By the Journal of Commerce, of Saturday last, we learn that Maine has gone back to the Administration with large majorities. Eight representatives to Congress were chosen, six of whom are for the Administration, and two whigs. The Administration governor, Fairfield, is chosen by a majority of 4 or 5,000, and the same party has a majority in both houses of the Legislature.

Vermont.—The Whig Governor is chosen and of the five representatives to Congress the whigs have three, and the administration two.

Whig Meeting of Westfield Township.

An unusually numerous meeting of the Whigs of Westfield Township was held, on Saturday Evening the 15th inst. at Barr's Hotel at the Scotch-Plains, pursuant to previous notice, to appoint delegates to the County Convention, and prepare for election. At least one hundred Whigs were in attendance;—it being the largest township meeting, preparatory to election, ever known in the township.

Col. Recompense Stansbury was chosen chairman, and Allen Wilson Secretary.

The following resolutions were after some discussion passed with great unanimity.

1. Resolved that we appoint nine delegates to represent Westfield township in the County Convention to be held at Orange on the 22d inst. to form a County ticket; and that the following persons be our delegates; viz. Gideon Ross, John Pierson, Ephraim Clark, Alexander Wilson, Samuel K Stevenson, John Wilson, James Leonard, John Randolph and Abraham Runyon.

2. Resolved, that fully believing that our fellow townsman Sheriff Osborn has given general satisfaction in his office, we unitedly and cordially recommend him to the County meeting for re-election.

3. Resolved, that with the present Sheriff on the ticket, we consider the claims of our township fully satisfied; and that therefore our delegates be instructed not to bring forward the name of any Westfield man for either Council or Assembly—except it should so happen that the Convention in making its arrangements should of its own accord make choice of having a candidate for one of the two houses from our township; in which case only, our delegates are hereby instructed, should a candidate for Council be tendered us, to present the name of John Wilson,—or if a candidate for the lower house be offered, to present the name of Gideon Ross, as the choice of this township. And that in all other business that may come before the meeting, our delegates be left to their own sound discretion.

The following persons were appointed to act as a poll Committee.

Ezra Drake, Dennis Coles, Zachariah Webster, John Pierson, Jos. M. Osborn, Uzal Cory, Ephraim Clark, Joseph Bradford, Martin Runyon, Abner Miller Jr. Alfred Berry, Wm. M. Jennings, Squire Pierson, Morris F. Randolph, Manning Vermule, Cornelius Boice.

A Committee of vigilance to attend to bringing voters to the polls, was then chosen as follows;—

Caleb Brokaw, Corra Ogden, Meeker, John Cowenhoven, John Ludlow, Joel Dunn, Joel Kinney, Richard Gale, Miles Sweney, Z. Webster, Linus Miller, Furman Walker, Asa Laing, Ezra Miller, Allen Wilson, Edwin Laing, James Enders, Wm. Dunn, Abm. Laing, Theophilus Pierson, Alex. Dunham, Raiph Frazee, Alexander Wilson, John Runyon, Vincent Barkley, Ezra Drake, James Leonard, Wm. Estil, Wm. Darby, Randolph Runyon, Wm. Sutton, Joseph Bradford, Robert Anderson, Edward F. Randolph, Dennis Coles, James C. Ayres, Abraham Parker, Shuttlew orth Adair, Daniel Osmon, Randolph Dunham, Ira Runyon, Pratt Drake, Ira Prudon, Alvah Gardner, Peter Boice, John Briant, Nathan Manning.

The proceedings were ordered to be published in the Newark Daily Advertiser and Plainfield Union.

The meeting then Adjourned.
Recompense Stansbury, Chairman.
Allen Wilson, Secy.
September 15. 1838.

The following effects of the gale and storm on Wednesday last, we take from a N. Y. paper.

In 19th street, we were informed that a large brick building, unoccupied, was blown down, crushing to the earth in its fall, a small wooded tenement, containing 8 or 10 human beings, all of whom, we are happy to state, escaped with some trifling injury.

Much damage no doubt, has been done to the shipping on the coast, while the vessels in the Harbor have not wholly escaped the effects of the storm.

The schooners Samuel B. Adbey of Staten Island, and Samuel Franklin of Duxbury, and a sloop dragged their anchors, and are ashore near Stapletons dock, Staten island. They will be got off with trifling damage.

All the vessels at anchor in the quarantine ground dragged their anchors for a considerable distance.

A schooner and a sloop, lumber loaded, and two schooners and a sloop light, are ashore at Governor's Island. They will probably be got off without being much damaged.

The Telegraph reports the ship Louisa from Liverpool as ashore on Old Point Comfort, and that one of the ships below is dismasted.

The floating light ship is at at anchor to the westward of West Bank. It is supposed that she had parted her mooring in the storm, and that the captain had put her inside the Hook.

The boats from Stonington and Providence had not arrived at one o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The steamboat Trenton, with the passengers who left Philadelphia at 12 o'clock Wednesday, put into Elizabethport, and remainedthere all night.

The steamboat Swan with the Southern mail, due early yesterday morning, did not leave South Amboy until day light.

The steamboat Lexington left last night for Stonington, but returned on account of some slight damage to her machinery.

The Massachusetts, for Providence, was detained until yesterday morning.

There are several vessels ashore in the kills, near Mescreau's ferry.

The ship reported as dismasted by the telegraph is the New York, Captain Niven from Liverpool The masts had been cut away to prevent the ship from dragging her anchors.

Several small schooners are ashore in the lower bay.

On Wednesday afternoon a fore and aft schooner came into the Hook with a signal of distress flying. One of the pilots ran her into the Horse Shoe.

Providential Escape.—As a young lady of Philadelphia was on a visit to her friends in this place, and Miss Rohr of this city, were looking over the precipice of "Woodword's rock," she fell down the precipice into the Conestoga river. The height of the rock above the river, into which the lady fell, and what some measure accounted for her miraculous escape; for what is most extraordinary after emerging from the water, she declared that she was not at all hurt. This is certainly one of the most providential escapes we have heard of. Many years ago a young man, a son of Mr. Francisous, was looking over the very same spot where the lady fell from, and in like manner fell down the precipice and was instantly killed. Two other cases of accident at the same spot are fresh in our memory, and in each the gentlemen barely escaped with life.—Lancaster Jour.

Progress in Science.—Among the many new inventions which have lately astonished the public we twing that the "Railroad pill Counting Machine" of Dr. Peters, may be said to cap the climax. It is worked by a dog!—counts the pills with unerring accuracy!!—distributes them into their boxes!—and performs the labor of twelve persons!!! The greatest difficulty which the proprietor has experienced in the preparation of his pills, was in the time it took up in counting them, so many to a box: and this has been most happily obviated by his exceedingly ingenious invention. Dr. Peters is procuring a patent for his machine, and will exhibit it at the Fair of the American Institute.

TORNADO.—The Erie (Pa.) Gazette says, that section of the country was visited on the 29th ult by one of the most destructive tornadoes since the year 1810. It commenced about two miles east of the town of Erie, and covered a space of 2 miles in width. To what distance it extended had not been ascertained. Its course was marked by unroofed houses and barns, uprooted trees, and the killing of horses and cattle. The greatest destruction of property is said to have been in Harbor creek, between the Four and Six Mile Creeks.

In England the heavy expenditure of maintaining the Canadas appears to be a subject of remark, and even in a late debate in the House of Lords, one nobleman well known Mr. Alexander Baring, remarked that he should have objection to see the Canadas annexed to the U. States.

Arithmetical Table Books

JUST Published, and for sale at this office, a new and improved Arithmetical Table Book, by the hundred, dozen, or single. A liberal commission to those who buy to sell again. May 1st, 1838.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 30th day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding; and a Vignette Title Page. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original drawings expressly for the work. Etchings on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of new, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the pianoforte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can prove interesting to the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—strictures upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engravings, music, &c.—notices of the actual drama and of amusements—original communications from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those who desire to commence with the subscriptions with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable, in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, and will contain, as heretofore, the valuable services of Morris, Fay, Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and permanency of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its music, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the new volume, in every respect, equal, if not superiour, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable source of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle countrywomen, the secluded student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Berclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and small pica type. It is embellished once every three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For one quarterly Engraved Vignette Title page, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the city of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY

At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generally behind no others for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe in the future. Its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservation of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and a peaceful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the earliest intelligence, and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

GREEN BROOK Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mental effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its end of aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation, and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The subscriber solicits a share of public patronage, and pledges himself to do all that he can to merit its continuance. EZRA FAIRCHILD.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ATI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain sent of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Bilious Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the stomach, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever &ues, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fits, &c.; and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I have acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use, and the obligation that I feel to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pressed, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active medicine, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if resorted to in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended, especially for accasional colds which one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon be in general use, as no one cannot but like them after having made use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case presented vomiting, and for the nervous sick headache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes of College,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other; it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

HORATIO BRYANT, } Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an institution of the above kind. It is within 31 miles of New York city,—to which as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON THE HOLY BIBLE,

By MR. JENKS, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered.

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee :—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, find of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose this work first. In it the sublime, the grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—and, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. School teachers and Bible classes.

It is beautifully illustrated by maps and numerous steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We earnestly recommend this work to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a 'goodly pearl,' which every devout man should seek to posses in his family.

Subscriptions also received here, for

When first my heart awoke to feel maternal love's deep power;
When not a transient tear could dim the smile of infant bliss,
That was not dried beneath the warmth of a mother's fervent kiss.

Ah! yet the prayer I learned to lisp at twilight by thy knee,
Is clear upon the deep-wrought page of hallowed memory!
And those soft tones that rose to heaven from out thy swelling breast,
They seem to sound upon my ear, though thou art gone to rest.

Blest mother! I remember thee, from youth's fresh, buoyant day;
A star thou wert to guide my feet, of pure and constant ray;
Thy love possessed a charm beyond the light of pleasure's beams,
And 'twas thy counsel that forbade my trust in earthly dreams.

And I remember a soft hand, that smoothed my aching head,
A tearful, guardian eye, that watched beside my curtained bed;
The careful step, the soothing draught thy kindness had prepared,
And all the tokens of that love thy orphan child once shared.

Blest mother! I remember thee, as guide, companion friend!
When years mature had taught my heart life's blessings and their end;
When I had learned to share thy griefs, to shed the tear for thee,
Who in my wayward days had turned to pray and weep for me.

'Twas mine to cheer thy widowed heart with all a daughter's love,
And lift thy sinking spirit up to brighter scenes above;
To scatter in thy lonely path the flowers which kindness weaves,
And bind around thy temples fair affection's myrtle leaves.

Blest mother! I remember thee, (alas! how sad the spot
On memory's page, which even now the tear of grief must blot!)
When first the blight of fell disease passed o'er thy constant heart,
And on thy brow, with death's pale hand, 'twas written "We must part!"

But not a murmur mingled then with faith's assurance given,
And not a fear passed with thee through the darksome vale to Heaven!
No! God's own rod and staff were there, nor could I wish thy stay,
When angels beckoned thee from earth and all its ills away.

Blest mother! I remember thee, when on thy sable bier,
And followed by an orphan train, which stranger hands must rear;
When laid within thy narrow bed, where now the grass turf grows,
While we were left alone to scan the tide of human woes.

Yet not alone, for One there is, our Father in the sky,
Who stoops to make our cause his own, who listens to our cry;
Upon his arm our strength was stayed, his hand hath been our guide,
And he who gives the ravens food, for us will still provide.

Blest mother! now I think of thee, as one amid that throng
Who chant before the throne of God their 'everlasting song:'
In midnight dreams thy angel form around my couch appears,
And off thy hand seems stretched again to wipe away my tears.

When gazing at the shining stars, their fixed and holy light,
Recalls thine own unwavering faith, and thy example bright;
And in the firmament of Heaven, a star thou'lt ever shine,
With beams more beautiful and bright—a lustre all divine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Value of the Oregon Territory.—In our last we promised to furnish our readers with a condensed view of that portion of Mr. Linn's Report to the Senate of the United States, on the occupation of the Oregon Territory, which treats the subjects with reference to other matters than the mere title. According to the opinions of Mr. Slocum, Messrs. Lewis and Clark, and others who have seen the country, its products are of the most valuable kinds, consisting of peltries of the most various descriptions, besides salmon fisheries, &c &c. The influence of the Hudson Bay Company is also mentioned as requiring to be counteracted owing to the vast power which their trappers and traders are likely to acquire among those with whom they deal. As the difficulties of passing the Rocky Mountains, which at one period were deemed insurmountable, have within a few years been overcome to such a degree that where a passage was regarded as impracticable, passes of easy ascent for waggons, &c. have been found, a fear is expressed that in the event of a war, hostile troops might be introduced by the way of the Oregon river, and brought over to the head waters of the Missouri river. To prevent such a movement, as well as the smuggling of goods of British manufacture free of duty into the territories of the United States, it is deemed advisable that a settlement be formed at the mouth of the Oregon river. As the evidence of the ease with which the defiles of the Rocky Mountains may be passed the names are given of several missionaries, who with their wives, had passed over. In the cases mentioned the course pursued was from the State of Missouri along and near to the banks of the river of that name, until they reached the Platte; thence along that river to its fork thence by the North fork and the black hills to near its source; thence to Green River, one of the branches of the Western Colorado, thence to Bear river, which empties itself into the Great Salt Lake: and thence to the head waters of Lewis river the Southern branch of the Columbia river, by which or its tributaries they pursued their course to Fort Wallawalla, one of the principal posts of the Hudson Bay company, within three hundred miles of the ocean. A great portion of the midland region is described as a wild country, to which refugees from all quarters will resort, and may be employed by Great Britain in the event of a war with the United States to great advantage.

In speaking of the Great Salt Lake, its length is stated at 150 miles and its breadth 40; no outlet to its waters being apparent although two streams flow into it. The report contains a quotation from the Ecclycopedia of Geography, in which a detailed account is given of the geological character of the country on either side of the Rocky mountains or great Back bone of the American continent, but its details are such as not to interest general readers. It is in speaking of the climate of the regions west of the Rocky mountains that the authorities cited indulge in terms of the most unqualified admiration, representing it as almost free from frost, and, except during four months of unbroken rainy weather, serene and delightful. Mr. Spalding, one of the missionaries alluded to as having crossed the Rocky Mountains with their wives, and descended on the other side, in an account published not long since, mentions a Dr. McLaughlin whose farm is on the Columbia river, and whose crops for the previous year amounted to 4,500 bushels of wheat, 4000 of peas, 1700 of barley, 1500 of oats &c. His horned cattle were 750, his hogs 400, with from 200 to 300 horses. He has also a saw and flour mill. The wild horses are very numerous, and of a very fine breed, resembling European coursers or the blood horses of Virginia, and may be bought from the natives for bands worth one or two dollars. Wild sheep are also found in great numbers and have fine wool on many parts of their bodies. The soil of the country, which rises in terraces from the Pacific ocean towards the interior, is of a rich mould, and for grazing purposes, is believed to be equal to the best of Mexico. From the entire description we are led to think that this region is destined to be thickly populated and to afford all the luxuries of a fine soil and climate to thousands whose tastes will induce them to abandon the scorching heat and intense cold of the Eastern side of this vast continent.

Hints to Young People.—No. 12.

SEEK KNOWLEDGE.

Do you ask me how? There is a common highway of knowledge, which is open and accessible to all. If you are poor, and compelled to live by your labor, if you are a mechanic, or engaged in any occupation that requires most of your time and strength, there are some means of improving the mind which are beyond your reach. Still as I have said, there are paths of knowledge which are open to all. Let your occupation or your resources be what they may, if you have a thirst for knowledge it is impossible that you should live without acquiring it. The countless blossoms of spring send forth a fragrance which pervades and perfumes the atmosphere; and to perceive and enjoy that fragrance we have only to breathe. The innumerable objects of knowledge around us, send forth their light and sound, and fragrance, in every direction; and to feel their influence, we have only to keep ourselves awake.

If you wish to obtain knowledge, let your resources or your happiness be what they may, you may succeed without fail by following these few very practicable directions;

1. Read. I suspect there is much less reading among our young people, than is generally supposed. I have been in several instances, surprised to learn that certain young men whom I know and who maintain a respectable appearance, were such miserable readers, that they could hardly spell out the words of a newspaper advertisement such a youth ought to be ashamed of his ignorance, as I doubt not he is; for with such advantages as every young person may command in this country, it is unnecessary that any one of common sense should be unable to read well.

If you are at all deficient in the art of reading, let it be your first object to supply that defect. The art of reading is one of the keys to the immense store house of knowledge. Let every young person acquire it completely, and hold it in constant requisition. The greater your facility of reading, the more at your command will be the vast fund of knowledge deposited in the vaults of literature and the records of science. The better you read the more you will read, and the greater benefit will you gain from reading.

Read habitually. Have always some useful book within reach, which you propose to read in course, at least so much of it as may answer your end. Have always as definite and distinct an object in view as you can.

Let it be to acquire a knowledge of some particular subject; and pursue that object till you have acquired the desired mastery over the subject. Much reading is useless and worse than useless from being entirely desultory. Some read every thing that falls in their way and apparently merely for the sake of reading; and the advantage of such reading seems to consist mainly in keeping the person, at least innocently occupied. But the innocence of such reading depends on the subjects of it.

Read only useful books. The most captivating class of books for the majority of young people, are works of fiction; and of this class of books, those are frequently most read, which are most worthless and pernicious. A very large portion of the fictitious literature of the day, conveys no useful knowledge to the readers at all. I am always sorry to see a certain class of novels lying on the counters of our stores, or on the benches of the mechanics, or on the center tables of the parlor, to steal away the leisure moments of the clerk, the apprentice, or the male or female scholar.

The importance of this subject is sufficient to claim attention at another time. If I find it convenient, I will therefore offer some further hints upon it in a future number.

CHARLES CRAYON.

Total Abstinence.—A loafer whose unspeakables exhibited undeniable marks of the encroachment of time and the want of good housewifery, lately called in at our office and inquired:

"How much do you charge to put an advertisement in your paper?"

"One dollar, sir" was the answer.

"I want to advertise my wife, and I thought as I should have considerable of that business to do, I would call and see if I could get it done cheaper."

"Ah! you have several women to advertise?"

"No, but I'm going to apply for a divorce, and that will have to be advertised you know."

"Yes, but how long has your wife been gone?

"Ever since last May."

"But it requires wilful absence for 3 years to sustain a petition for a divorce."

"Does it?" said the fellow, and his lips dropped: he crammed his hands into his trowsers, shook his head and muttered—

"How's that mister?" said he: "Did you say total Abstinence for three years?"

"Exactly."

"Well then I guess I'll wait a spell!"

Mauvaise City Express.

The Georgetown (D. C.) Advocate speaks of the general health of that town—very, very few funerals, and several Weddings.

The Springfield (Illinois) Journal of the 1st says the thermometer rose in the shade on the Saturday previous to 100 deg.

Curious.—"What I understand by credit is, that which thus connects labor and capital, by giving to labor the use of the capital. In other words, intelligence, good character, and good morals, bestow on those who have not capital, a power, a trust, a confidence which enables them to obtain it, and to employ it usefully for themselves and others. These active men of business build their hopes of success on their industry, attentiveness, and their economy and their integrity. A wider theatre for lawful activity is under their feet and around them, than was ever spread before the eyes of the young and enterprising generations of men on any spot enlightened by the sun. Before them is the ocean. Every thing in that direction invites them to efforts of enterprise and industry in the pursuits of commerce and the fisheries.—Around them, on all hands, are thriving and prosperous manufactures; an improving agriculture, and the daily presentation of new objects of internal improvement, while behind them is almost half a continent of the richest land, at the cheapest prices, under healthful climates, and washed by most magnificent rivers that on any part of the the globe pay their homage to the sea. In the midst of all these glowing and glorious prospects, they are neither restrained by ignorance, nor smitten down by the penury of personal circumstances. They are not compelled to contemplate to hopelessness and despair, all the advantages thus bestowed on their condition by Providence. Capital though they may have little or none, credit supplies its place; not as the refuge of the prodigal and the reckless; not as gratifying present wants with the certainty of future absolute ruin; but as the genius of honorable trust and confidence, as the blessing, voluntarily offered to good conduct; as the beneficent agent which assists honesty and enterprise in obtaining comfort and independence."—Daniel Webster.

A queer problem.—An old gentleman had 3 sons, and they were all on a visit to their parent at the same time. The old man was so delighted with their company, that he took a basket and went into the cellar for fruit, and returned with it full of apples, and having the greatest esteem for the eldest, he gave him half he had and half an apple; and to the second son he gave half he then had and half an apple: and to the youngest he also gave half he had left, and half an apple: and had then one apple left for himself. I request to know how many apples he had at first, and the number he gave to each son.

N. B.—There is not to be an apple broke, cut, or divided.

Unwritten Philosophy.—In my school-boy days, when I loved better to rob birds' nests and plunder orchards than acquire knowledge, I have often deserted the school room and pursued the above mentioned avocations in the forest, in my usual quick way. I recollect once, when having been lost in the intricacies of the wood, I stumbled upon a little hut. Being extremely thirsty, and rightly concluding that a spring would be found in its vicinity, I wended my way thither. I found it occupied by an old woman, of whom I requested a draught of water. It was soon furnished; and when I had despatched it, I was overwhelmed with questions.

"Ar'nt you one of the 'cademy boys?" inquired she.

"Yes, marm," was the reply.

"Well, I declare!" ejaculated the old woman; "they say you larn queer things down there. Why, they say the world is round!"

"The world, marm," answered I, anxious to display my acquired knowledge, "is not exactly round, but resembles in shape a flattened orange; and it turns on its axis once in twenty-four hours."

"Well, I don't know any thing about its axes," replied she, "but I know it don't turn round, for if it did we'd be all tumbled off; and as to its being round, any one can see its a square piece of ground, standing on a rock!"

"Standing on a rock! but upon what does that stand?"

"Why, on another, to be sure!"

"But what supports the last?"

"Lud! child, how stupid you are! There's rocks all the way down!"

Things worth remembering.

Controversy.—A man who is fond of disputing will, in time, have few friends to dispute with.

Speech.—Truth is clothed in white. But a lie comes forth with all the colors of the rainbow.

Adversity, a good teacher.—Those bear disappointments the best, who have been most used to them.

Example.—When a misfortune happens to a friend, look forward and endeavor to prevent the same thing from happening to yourself.

Servants of values.—The worth of every thing is determined by the demand for it. In the deserts of Arabia, a pitcher of cold Water is of more value than a mountain of gold.

Luck and Labor.—A guinea found in the street will not do a poor man so much good as half a guinea earned by industry.

Earning the best getting.—Give a man work and he will get money.

Early Hours.—Since the introduction of candles, luxury has increased. Our fathers rose with the lark, and went to bed with the sun.

"John," said a traveller to a farmer's boy who was hoeing, "your corn is small." "Yes, we planted the small kind." "But it looks dwarfish and yellow." "Yes, we planted the yellow sort." "I mean you will not get more than half a crop, do you understand me?" "O, yes, I understand, we don't expect to, for we planted on shares."

Duelling.—Answer to a Challenge.—The eccentric H. H. Breckenridge, one of the the judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, when a young man, was challenged to fight a duel by an English officer, whom he answered as follows.

"I have two objections to this duel matter; one is, I am afraid I should hurt you; the other is, I am afraid you would hurt me. I do not see any good it would do me to put a ball through your body. I could make no use of you when dead, for any culinary purposes, as I would a rabbit or a turkey. I am no cannibal to feast on the flesh of men. Why then shoot down a human creature of which I could make no use? A Buffalo would make better meat. For though your flesh might be delicate and tender, yet it wants the firmness and consistency, which takes and retains salt. At any rate it would not be fit for a long sea voyage.

"You might make a good barbecue, it is true, being of the nature of a Raccoon or Opposum; but people are not in the habit of barbecuing any thing that is human now. And as to your hide, it is not worth taking off, being little better than a two year old colt. So much for you. As to myself, I do not like to stand in the way of any thing that is harmful. I am under the impression that you might hit me. This being the case, I think it most advisable to stay at a distance. If you wish to try your pistols, take some object, a tree or a barn door, about my dimensions. If you hit that, send me word, and I shall acknowledge that, if I had been in the same place, you might also have hit me."

"Poetry of Travelling through New Jersey."—Mrs. Gilman has written a book of the above nomenclature, in which we have no doubt, the intelligent lady has fully justified the pretensions of that versatile genius "Travelling," to the sensibilities of "Poetry." But if Mrs. G., or any other mortal being, will try the experiment in the Steamboat and Rail Road mail line, that undertakes to accommodate passengers at 12 o'clock M., with a speedy and comfortable ride from N. York to Philadelphia, and imagine in any part of the intermediate distance that there is any "poetry in travelling;" they must possess more philosophy than we have ever dreamed of. A vulgar scrabble for a bad dinner—a passionate and fruitless bawling for impudent servants—a rude and uncommunicative crew—a continued anxiety about baggage, because of the recklessness of those whose duty it ought to be to take care of it—a jam into close and filthy cars more fit for penitentuary service than carriages for gentlemen—a gratuitous ride out of your latitude from Bordentown up the Delaware river to Trenton, and a shower of coal dust to put out your eyes—the necessity imposed upon many to carry their own baggage across the canal—get it aboard the cars as they can, and take a number for themselves on the opposite until a change may happen, through the merciful interposition of an agent's benevolence—an arrival near midnight instead of sundown, at Philadelphia, and a few other "accommodations" which are sure to fall in your way are some of the traits "of travel" in a line, which we in all future time shall cherish a most fervent hope of avoiding. The worst punishment we should desire to inflict upon the proprietors and managers would be that they ride in their own line until they learn the comparative value of money and comfort—until the sensibilities they have butchered shall have resumed their equanimity, and until they shall have expiated the inquity of having perpetrated the foulest possible reproach that could be cast upon the enterprise of the age, and the character of the American Rail Roads.—Madisonian.

Power of Electricity.—A salad of mustard or water cress may be produced in a few minutes by the assistance of electricity. The process is to immerse the seed for a few days previously, in diluted oxymuriatic acid, then sow it in a very light soil letting it be covered in a metalic cover, and then bring it in contact with an electrical machine. By the agents employed in this process, eggs, which require 20 days application of animal heat to hatch them—may be hatched in a few hours. Rain water, apparently free from any noxious animalcula, in an hour may be rendered full of living insects!

Outrageous Assault on a Pastor.—On Thursday evening, while Mr. Wm. J. Loomis, a white gentleman, who has for the last two years officiated as pastor of the African church at the Corner of Leonard and Church Streets, was passing through the street, a colored man named Willis Hodges, who was formerly a member of the same church, came up to him and struck him so violent a blow on the mouth as to knock out his four front teeth. On Saturday Mr. Loomis complained at the Police Office, and Hodges was taken into custody and committed to prison. It is said that the outrage originated from a feeling of envy or jealousy on the part of Hodges, who had applied for the situation. (N Y Jour Com.

The election in Arkansas takes place on Oct. 1st.

A Pirate on the coast.—An arrival at Charleston brings information of a schooner from New York for Pensacola being boarded by a piratical schooner on the 29th ult., near Key West, which at first pretended to be in want of water. The Captain of the schooner that was robbed says they took from his vessel the amount of $400 worth of articles, he also stated that he was obliged to be very polite and make some presents, and he considered himself lucky to get off without further injury.

Yankee Shrewdness.—Landing it over the Mexican Gallon Law.—We understand that previous to the Division Muster at Dedham, yesterday, a shrewd one hit upon the following novel expedient to evade the license law. He made application to the selectmen for a license to exhibit a striped pig during the parade day, which was granted. He accordingly procured a pig, and with a brush painted some stripes on his back, and yesterday morning he had a tent erected on the field, with due notice on the exterior, that a striped pig was to be seen within; price of admission six and a quarter cents. The rate being so low, numerous visitors were induced to call upon his swinish majesty, and every one on coming out appeared highly gratified with the kind and courteous reception he met with from the keeper of the remarkable pig, for each comer was treated to a glass of brandy and water or gin, or whatever liquor he might prefer, without any extra charge. Some were so well pleased that they were induced to take a second look at the animal, and were as kindly and liberally treated as at their first visit. At the last accounts the exhibitor was driving a brisk business, and was likely to make a profitable day's job in exhibiting his striped pig."—Boston Gaz.

GOV. WILLIAM CLARK, of Missouri, was buried in St. Louis on the 3d instant. His name will always be remembered, together with that of Merriwether Lewis, Esq., as being the leaders of the band that made the first journey across the Rocky Mountains to the mouth of the Columbia river.—Their brave exploits are familiar with every child.

He was sixty-eight when he died, and was probably the oldest American settler residing in St. Louis.

Disgraceful Mob in Buffalo.—Mr. Burr who brought Ratiburn Allen from New Orleans to Buffalo, was mobbed last Thursday week by a parcel of blackguards, and pelted with stones and rotten eggs. He attempted says the Rochester Daily Advertiser, to get away from them but was so closely pursued, that he was obliged to run into the Eagle Tavern, where he was followed by the ruffians. He jumped into the bar, and got under counter. Some of his pursuers went into the bar, and kicked and pounded him in the most brutal manner.

"He cried murder and begged that have his life spared; yet there seemed to be no more feeling in his ruffian pursuers, than is generally evinced by ferocious beasts. He finally succeeded in getting out of the bar; and ran out at the back door. Some of the blackguards stood ready to meet him as soon as he got out, and showered upon him rotten eggs in abundance. An officer then arrived who was inclined to do his duty, and the fracas ceased."

Crops—POTATOES.—A subscriber from Lewis county who called yesterday, says that around him the crops were very good. Potatoes especially are very abundant, and worth about 16cts per bushel. He says they can be barrelled and brought to this market for about 20 cts. charges making 35 cts. in all. Another gentleman from Tompkins county, between Seneca and Cayuga Lakes, say that in all the regions around him the crops are indifferent; that the wheat in threshing, yields but about two thirds of what had been expected from the appearance of the straw. Wheat he says must be very dear.—Journal of Commerce.

Intellectual Culture.—A cultivated mind may be said to have infinite stores of infinite gratification. Every thing may be made interesting to it, by becoming a subject of thought or inquiry. Books, regarded merely as a gratification, are worth more than all the luxuries on earth. A taste for literature secures cheerful occupation for the unemployed and languid hours of life; and how many persons, in these hours, for want of innocent resources are now impelled to coarse and brutal measures. How many young men can be found in this city, who unaccustomed to find a companion in a book and strangers to intellectual activity, are almost driven in the long dull evenings of winter to haunts of intemperance, and depraving society. It is one of the good signs of the times, that taste for literature and science are taking their place among other public amusements, and attract even more than theatres. This is one of the first fruits of our present intellectual culture. What a harvest may we hope for from its wider diffusion.—Dr. Channing.

Intolerance.—Dr. Franklin being in company this subject was discussed, the Doctor to illustrate some remarks which he had made in favor of toleration, took up a bible, and opening at Genesis read the following parable to the surprise of his hearers, who wondered that such a passage should be noticed; "And it came to pass after these things that Abraham sat in the door of his tent about the going down of the sun. And behold a man bent down with age was coming down from the wilderness leaning on a staff. And Abraham arose and met him and said unto him, 'Come in I pray thee, and wash thy feet, and tarry the night.' And the old man said, 'Nay, for I will abide under the tree.' But Abraham pressed him greatly, so he turned and went into the tent. And when Abraham saw that he blessed not God, he said unto him, 'Dost thou not worship the Most High God, Creator of Heaven and earth?' And the man answered and said, 'I do not worship thy God, neither do I call upon his name, for I have made a God unto myself, that dwelleth in my house and provideth me with all things.' And Abraham's wrath was kindled against the man, and he arose and drove him forth into the wilderness with blows. And God said, 'Have I not borne with him these three hundred and eight years, and nourished him and clothed him, notwithstanding he rebelled against me, and couldst not thou, who art thyself a sinner, bear with him one night?'"

Detroit now has a population of about 10,000, and has grown to its present importance by the aid of the Erie canal. In 1834, the number of inhabitants was 4,972. There are 90 steamboats and other vessels, of about 6,000 tons.

The Indianapolis Farmer says that fifteen wagons passed through that place on the 1st Aug. loaded with emigrants from U. Canada, on their way to Missouri. Twenty seven waggons with 142 persons started in company and were but a few days behind.

THE WEATHER.—A tremendous storm commenced on Tuesday night about 12 o'clock, and continued during the whole of yesterday, and appears likely to last for a day or two yet. The wind has been blowing strongly over the city, and quite a gale off the coast. The rain has been falling in torrents during nearly the whole time, so that an umbrella is very little protection. As the sun crosses the line on the 22d inst. this is undoubtedly the equinoctial storm. Its commencing so early and being so violent, are generally pregnostics of a fine fall season, and we may safely anticipate a blooming and healthful Indian summer. (N. Y. Whig.

Good News from Canada.—We are happy to inform our readers that all the troubles in the lower province at least are at an end forever. Henceforth there will be no more interesting commotions—bad blood will no longer exist between the races—the province will be purged of all the elements that work mischief. 🖙 Dr. Brandeth has established an agency in Montreal. N. Y. Com.

In consequence of a sudden rise in bread stuffs in England, owing probably to speculation, as there is no sufficient evidence of a failure in the crops, flour has risen in the New York markets; and by consequence elsewhere in the United States. In Baltimore holders are asking $9, and grain dealers $2 a bushel for wheat. Corn $1. Oats 47 cts.

The crops are good in the West, it would appear by the following note from the Wabash Courier of the 6th—

In the State, (Indiana,) and Illinois, as far as our knowledge extends, the prospects of an abundant crop were never greater, and nothing but an uncommon early frost can blight the hopes of the farmer as to this important staple. Indeed, this year promises, so far as the West is concerned to be one of unusual abundance in the production of all the necessaries of life.

It is stated in the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser that scarcely a flouring mill in Ohio or Michigan is now in run, in consequence of the almost unprecedented drought, while the Mill at Rock Rock (running by artificial water works) is daily turning out about 600 brls of flour from Ohio Wheat. Many of the owners of western mills, have sold their wheat unground, to the Black Rock mills, so dry are the streams, on which they are located.

The idea is suggested in the St. Louis Gazette of a line of Steam Packets to ply regularly between that place and London or Liverpool. The writer thinks that steamers of a thousand or fifteen hundred tons burthen may be so constructed as to navigate the ocean and yet not draw so much water as to prevent their ascending the Mississippi.

The receipts of the several Theatres in New York on Monday evening, are given as follows—Park, $1,600; Natio. al $1,400; Franklin, $500 Olympic, $300. Total, $3,800.

Providential Escape.—The Presbyterian Church of Ridley, Delaware co., Pa. which is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Alvin H. Parker, was recently the scene of an extraordinary and alarming occurrence. It had been thoroughly repaired and furnished with new ceiling, pews, and pulpit and had only been occupied a short time before the disaster occurred, which might have proved fatal to many of the worshippers. A large congregation had been assembled on the Sabbath, and had not retired more than half an hour, when, in consequence of some defect in the workmanship, the cross beams gave way and the whole ceiling with the exception of a space immediately over the pulpit, was precipitated on the pews below. In examining the ruins, we were led to conclude that had the catastrophe occurred while the congregation were in the house nearly every individual would have been killed or seriously injured.

The Cincinnati Whig of the 10th inst says that the drought in that section of the country is becoming a serious matter. The same paper says—

In Kentucky, we understand, the drought is unusually disastrous. We learn that Messrs. Fogg and Buckney, were in Flemingsburg last week with their circus horses, and that water was so scarce in that place that it cost them $12 per day for a sufficient quantity for their horses—more could be had within three miles of the place. The farmers in the neighborood were harvesting oatmeal in the great scarcity of water and expected, (if the dry weather continues so many days longer,) to be compelled to remove all their cattle from that section of the State to some place where water could be had.

Robbery.—Our village for a few weeks past, has been the scene of midnight burglaries. An attempt was made several nights since to enter the store of Price & Shotwell, but the rogues were frustrated in their design by alarming the clerks. One night last week the Drug Store of W. & A. G. Watson, in Cherry street, was entered by prying the door and breaking the lock. About $5 in change and several articles were stolen. On the same night an attempt was made by the same fellows, probably to enter the bookstore of Mr. John Pearson; several panes of glass were broken, but in pushing up the window a piece of pine got wedged between the upper and lower sashes, which rendered it an entrance that way, impossible. They then broke into the tin ware manufactory of Mr. Jons. Thompson, mistaking it, no doubt, for Joel Wilson's hard ware store, but finding their mistake, decamped without taking any thing.—Ramsey Her.

Good out of Evil.—It is estimated that the Canadian mobs &c. have gained to the U. States 25,000 settlers, and half a million of dollars.—It's an ill wind that blows nobody good.

Fire.—About 11 o'clock on Thursday night last, a fire broke out in the stables of John Argue in this village; and although the night was warm and still, the fire progressed with astonishing rapidity. The scarcity of water and the heat of the burning wood, rendered the engine comparatively inefficient; but happily the surrounding buildings were saved. Mr. Argue's horses and carriages were all rescued. The buildings with their contents were consumed. Loss about $600. The fire was accidental.—Somerville Whig.

Fires at Elizabethtown.—The rope walk of Mr J. P. Schuil, at Elizabethtown, was entirely destroyed by fire on Saturday night. The loss is estimated at about $5000, of which part was insured.

We have to record the occurrence of three fires, in our town, since our last paper was made up. The first was a barn situated near the Market, belonging to Geo. C. Thomas Esq., and occupied by Robt. Kingsborough, which was entirely destroyed with about five tons of hay belonging to Mr. K. and a quantity of hides belonging to Mr. James Williams.

The second was also a barn near the residence of Isaac H. Williamson Esq., which was also burnt to the ground, with about two tons of hay and a gig and harness belonging to Mr. Brian. The barn belonged to Mr. H. C. Freeman.

The third occurred on Saturday night, in the rope walk of Julius Shields, on the road leading to the Wheatsheaf, which, together with manufactured stock and the entire machinery of the establishment was consumed. We learn that Mr. S.'s loss is about $2,500, to cover which he was insured for $2000

It is believed almost beyond a doubt, that in each instance, the fire was communicated by incendiaries.—Eliz. Jour.

Interesting Occurrence.—On Tuesday last, a lady 105 years of age, residing in the city of N. York, who has never used spectacles and still retains in a remarkable degree, all her mental and bodily faculties, took it into her head to visit a female friend in Newark. She got into the stage and alone without attendant came to this city. A gentleman learning that such a person was in town, called on her and requested her to accompany him to the house of a friend, which she accordingly did. Here she was introduced to a gentleman 107 years of age; and these two venerable survivors of the last century there held a most interesting conversation of by gone days. Having always live l in this city she had a perfect recollection of the time when the river covered the ground where St. John's Church now stands. In the evening the lady, whose name we understand is Gouge, returned to the city.—New Jersey Eagle.

Truly we Upper Canadians cut a sorry figure in the public eye, d.spise it as we like. We are torn by intestine factions—all business is at a stand—our finances are exhausted—our credit beggared—our country covered with soldiers—our jails full of prisoners, our taverns of militia men, our magistrates are partizans, our mechanics red hot politicians, and more treasure is spent and spending over us, than we ever were worth, or ever shall be. We are one of the "Queen's hard bargains."—Toronto Patriot.

The last officer who commanded Washington's Life Guard is no more. Gen. William Coffax, died on Friday last, at his residence in Pompton, near the ground upon which Washington's army was encamped. On Sunday last he was buried with the honors of War, by a detachment from Gen Godwin's Brigade, composed of the Cadets, Gen. Godwin's Guards, with their respective Bands of Music, commanded by Captains Conger and Allen.—The military ceremonies were conducted by Gen. Godwin, assisted by Col. Garrison. The solemn and affecting music of the Bands, the precision of the exercises, and admirable appearance of the military, with a procession more than three fourths of a mile, gave to the scene an imposing character seldom surpassed.—Paterson Int.

From a census recently taken, it appears that the population of the city o Savannah and hamlets, is as follows; whites 7071: free colored persons 735; slaves 4652; total 12,758. In 1830, the population was 7076; increase 4982.

The New Orleans papers of the 6th say that a French brig of War has arrived off the coast of Mexico with intelligence that an additional force of fifteen vessels and 10,000 men would be sent by the French Government to aid in the contemplated attack on Vera Cruz.

The sloop of War Nunc d had sailed from Tampico, for Havana and Jamaica, with about $1,000,000 in specie and a large quantity of cochineal and vanilly for the former port. The packet brig Limet had also left Tampico with about $1,000,000 destined for England.

A letter published in the St Augustine Herald of the 25th ult. states that the Florida coast from Musquito to Cape Sabble is in the quiet possession of the Indians, who are recruiting their strength and preparing their food, preparatory, to the commencement of the next winter's campaign.

An Incarnate Fiend.—A drunken wretch, an Irishman, named James Quinley, was brought to the police office this day under the following circumstances. Quidly was staggering through Roosvelt street in a state of beastly intoxication in the path along which he was reeling, was the child of Mr. Hiram Holden of 51 Cherry street. It was doing no harm, meaning no harm, but joyously playing in the innocence of its heart. It seemed that this Quidly by some means stumbled against the child, when so exasperated the brute, that he actually seized the little creature by the legs and dashed its head against the curb. The child ten years old was horribly mutilated, and is not expected to live. The people when they saw this diabolical outrage, were on the eve of lynching the fellow but finally agreed to take him to the police office, where he was committed.—N. Y. Times.

The Banwar Hotel.—Established as offered for sale, we regret to see, on account of the continued indisposition of the present proprietor.—We commend the following extract from the advertisement to printers disposed to engage in the business, to one of the thriving manufacturing towns of our State;

To any person wishing to embark in a permanent and lucrative occupation, this opportunity offers great advantages, as the establishment combines the materials and good will of the Advocate and Herald, and has no rival in the place—thus rendering it one of the best establishments in the State.

Wm. Lyon Mackenzie, Esq. of Canada notoriety, has declared his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States, and has thus "renounced for ever, all allegiance and fidelity to any prince, Potentate, State or State Sovereignty whatsoever, and particularly to the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland." Her Majesty's subjects in North America will scarcely regret that he has taken this step.

Paupers.—The city of New York is full of paupers; the lower part is infested with sturdy beggars of all descriptions. The doors of hotels at night are crowded with gangs of girls and boys who are noisy and vociferous in their demands for charity. The truth is, begging has become a business; Not one in twenty are objects of charity, and our citizens and strangers may be assured they are grossly imposed upon every time they contribute a cent to the impostors. The present number of beggars will be greatly increased in the course of the next months. Hundreds in New Jersey, Connecticut and even in Philadelphia, are on the march for head quarters as the New York Alms House is familiarly called.—N. Y. Gazette.

Mormons.—A Missouri paper contains doleful accounts of the Mormons in that state.—They are said to have armed themselves with guns, swords, &c. and are in the habit of surrounding the dwellings of the farmers, and compelling them to deliver up to them whatever property they take a fancy to. They keep about five hundred men constantly embodied for depredations of this kind, and can on extra occasions muster 1500 fighting men. Their operations are principally on the Indian lands too. A public meeting of the citizens of that county has been held in reference to their proceedings.

Democratic Meeting.

The Democratic Republican Electors of the township of Westfield, friendly to the present administration, and opposed to monopoly and high taxes, are requested to meet at James Frazee's, Scotch Plains, on Wednesday, the 26th inst. at 6 o'clock, P. M. to appoint delegates to the county convention, and to make the necessary arrangements for the coming Election.

An Address may be expected, from Col. Zabriskie, of New Brunswick, and others.

Sept. 21st, 1838.

The New York whigs have nominated Wm. H. Seward, for governor, and Luther Bradish, for Lieutenant governor.

The administration party have nominated the present incumbents, Wm. L. Marcy and John Tracy.

The contest will be as animated a one as the state has ever witnessed, and almost decisive as to whom we shall have for our next President, and whether we shall have a Sub-Treasury, or a National Bank.

Middlesex Tickets.—The Whigs have nominated George T. McDowell, for Council; and George P. Molleson, Lewis Golding, David B. Applegel, and Adam Lee, for Assembly.

The V. B. party have nominated James T. Dunn, for Council; and Francis W. Brinley, James Dunham, Merril Mundy, and Clarkson Brown, for Assembly.

In the Vermont election the whig candidate for governor was elected by a majority of about five thousand, and the whig majority in the state legislature is much increased from what it was last year. In the 4th District, which last week we gave to the administration, the Van Buren candidate lost his election by 15 votes, and there is no choice. In order to be elected he must have a majority of all the votes, and there were two whig candidates and about 50 scattering votes. Very probably there will be another election in which the administration are likely to succeed.

In the next congress are 242 members, 20 of whom have been chosen this month,—72 will be chosen in October,—54 in November,—and 96 next year. Of the 20 already elected, leaving the 4th district in Vermont vacant, and giving the 3d District in Illinois to the whigs,—10 are Van Buren men, 9 are whigs, and 1 is conservative.

Nine members in Georgia, and 1 in Arkansas are chosen on Monday next. Nine in S. Carolina, on the Monday after: and on the next day, Oct. 9, 28 in Pennsylvania, 19 in Ohio, and 8 in New Jersey are to be chosen.

Business in New York is very brisk and lively,—some say never more so. The city is full of merchants and strangers, so much so that all the spacious hotels are hardly able to accomodate them. Business is also in a prosperous condition every where.

The whig papers are complaining much that the Sub-treasury scheme is now in actual operation all over the United States,—they think the law requiring the public moneys to be deposited in the state banks ought to be followed. We will not attempt to decide who is right in this thing, but for ourselves would much like to have a short trial of the far-famed and long-talked-of Sub-Treasury scheme, after which we could ill decide whether it is a bad or a good scheme, and reject or adopt it accordingly. Thus far—over a year,—it has done no harm, for under its operations, (not in consequence of it) the banks have resumed, and the business of the country has revived. If on a trial of a year or two longer it shall be found not to have occasioned any loss to the government, or a scarcity of specie to the people, we shall then say nothing against it.

We regret to learn that sickness is prevailing extensively at Knoxville, Tenn. A day of fasting, humiliation and prayer, was to have been held on the 7th inst. in consequence.

WHIG COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Whig Convention for this county met at Orange on Saturday afternoon last. John Wilson, President; Joseph Munn and Robert Baldwin, Vice Presidents; John J. Briant and Philip Kingsley, Secretaries. We understand that the meeting was a remarkably harmonious one—None ever held in the county having been more so. The business was soon accomplished, and the delegates separated early, with satisfaction and union prevailing among them, after forming the following ticket:

For Council—Amzi Armstrong

For Assembly—Abraham V. Speer, Edward Sanderson, John Littell. A C M Pennington, and William Stites

For Sheriff—Jonathan Osborn, junr.

A free pardon, it is said, has been granted to Sutherland, the celebrated Canadian leader, and American journeyman printer.

The Alabama State Legislature comprises 123 members, of whom 83 are in favor of a Sub-treasury, and 40 are in favor of a National bank.

We regret to say that we are obliged to decline the publication of "P's" communication for several reasons:—1st, it is personal, and from the very nature of the case, impossible to be otherwise, though no names are given, and the language is decorous. 2d, it would do no good, only creating an excitement among the people on a subject of which they know nothing. 3d. it is not accompanied by the author's name—we have not even permission to tell it to any one who may feel aggrieved by the remarks, thereby taking the whole responsibility upon ourself, which we are by no means willing to do, on a subject of which we are entirely ignorant.

Shipwrecks.—The ship Georgia, from Turk Island for New York, sunk by a leak at sea, on the 3d inst., the crew taking to a small boat from which they were rescued after 4 days peril by a Savannah brig. The schr. Mary Jane of New Bedford, foundered on the 7th. After 7 days suffering, with hunger and exposure, the crew were rescued by the ship Helen, of Charleston. One hand died of exhaustion.

A gentleman who arrived at Norfolk on Sunday from Elizabeth City, states that information was received there of the wrecking of fourteen vessels at Ocracoke during the late gale.

A fire broke out in a low range of buildings in Morristown on Tuesday, belonging to David Mills. It was subdued by the fire companies after about $200 damage to Messrs. Bailey's & Lounsbury's carpenter shop.

Important to Printers.—We are happy to communicate to our brethren of the press, that we have found a simple and economical substitute for the ordinary lye used for washing type, and which is applied by a method which does not deteriorate the letter so much as the brush or swing trough does, and clears away the ink far more effectually than either recipe. Put into a thin earthen vessel two scotch pints of rain or river water; take one pound of caustic or unslaked lime and one pound of pearl ashes and mix them among the water; cork the bottle and shake well for twenty minutes; then lay it aside and allow the ingredients to settle. In the course of next day it should be carefully poured out, quite transparent, into another vessel, whence it may be kept for use, always taking care to secure it well from the action of the atmosphere. Thus, an alkali of the most powerful kind is produced in the application of which, while it cleans off the ink, and dissolves picks on the face of the letter, has not the slightest tendency to injure the metal, as we have proven by numerous experiments. It is used for washing jobs &c., by being poured on a small piece of sponge, which should be firmly tied on the end of a stick, like a mop, otherwise it will seriously injure the fingers of the operator. After this once been laid on, the job is cleaned from the alkali by dashing a couple of pailfulls of water upon it. We may add that half a farthings worth of this ley will be sufficient to wash the largest form, and may be accomplished in five minutes. After a most satisfactory trial of twelve months, we would recommend it to the trade. Having felt its advantages, we are anxious that all our brethren should participate in the benefit of our discovery.—Forres Gazette.

It is rather surprising than otherwise that there are not more casualties among us, considering our expossedness. Even where there is habitual watchfulness, there is still much liability to misfortune and evil. The remark is suggested by a record of an afflicting death of a young lady, which we notice in the Pendosian, by lock Jaw, "produced by accidentally running a bone in her foot, which caused no alarm at the time."

A lad playing in the 3d story of a house in Boston on Sunday last, fell out of the window on the pavement below, and was so injured that he is not expected to live.

COBBLERS AND TINKERS.—An industrious journeyman shoemaker in this town has made during the ten months ending on the 1st inst. one thousand five hundred and thirty seven pair of ladie's kid slips, with spring heels, for which he received nearly four hundred and seventy dollars; or at the rate of about five hundred and sixty dollars a year. This we call doing well.

Dr. Bushby, whose figure is beneath the common size, was one day accosted in a public room, by an Irish baroonet of colossal statue, with "May I pass to my seat, O giant?" when the doctor made way, and replied, "Pass, O, pigmy." "Oh Sir," said the baronet, "my expression alluded to the size of your intellect." "and my expression" said the doctor, "to the size of yours."

Great Profit.—A Farmer in Berkshire town last year purchased one thousand dollars worth of the Morus Multicaulis, with which, last spring, he stocked three fourths of an acre of ground, only. He has just sold the product that three fourths of an acre for six thousand dollars—making a nett profit of nearly $5000!—Northampton Mass. Gaz.

Subscriptions received at this Office, for the

COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY ON

THE HOLY BIBLE,

By Mr. Jenks, D. D.

The 5th and last volume of this invaluable work will be published in June, after which time the books will be delivered:

TERMS.—Three dollars a volume, or fifteen dollars the set. Size, super-royal octavo.

They contain nearly the whole of the commentaries of Henry, Scott and Doddridge, besides selections from several other standard writers.

We select a few from the many recommendations of the work.

From W. C. Brownlee:—"Were I to have my choice of this work on one hand, and of Henry, Scott, and Doddridge, separately, on the other, I would decidedly choose the work by Dr. Jenks. * * * The grand and precious doctrines of the gospel are exhibited. It is a work of exceedingly great value to the private christian and to heads of families—it is, moreover, conveniently arranged for family reading as well as private reading,—and is particularly applicable to the wants of S. S. and teachers and Bible classes."

It is beautifully printed, and contains several steel engravings, maps and well executed cuts, all designed to illustrate Scripture manners, customs and antiquities.

We cannot conclude without a word to our brethren and friends. It is indeed a goodly pearl, which every devout man should seek to possess in his family.

Susscriptions also received here, for

THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE,

a very large work, complete in one volume,—at the price of five dollars.

Dr. Tyler says—"Its well worthy a place in every family library.

Dr. Alexander says—The Theological Sudent will find it a convenient and useful companion.

Want of room only prevents us from giving further recommendations of both these important and valuable works. All who are able should possess them both.

J. HAWLEY'S VEGETABLE ATI-BILLIOUS PILLS.

The Proprietor has come to the conclusion that all diseases proceed from an irregular state of the Gall, principally the effects of colds, which are the fountain seat of all diseases. A sovereign remedy is now offered to the afflicted public; these pills have proved to be the greatest and most efficacious medicine now in use.

The success these pills have had in removing and curing diseases is unparalleled. They are recommended for Intermittent Fevers, Jaundice, Affections of the serious, Liver, Spleen, Hysterics, Dyspepsia, Headache, Giddiness, Scurvy, Rheumatism, Fever Ague, Dysentery, Cholera, Sea-sickness, Asthma, Piles, Worms in Children, Fluor, &c. and they are found to be a powerful remedy in restoring the stomach to a healthy state. They are mild but active.

CERTIFICATE.

Bridgeport, Feb. 20th, 1838.

Mr. Joseph Hawley,

Dear Sir,—Having heard much in favor of your celebrated pills, and being advised by a friend to try them in my family, I must say in justice to you, that they are, for a family medicine, superior to any thing I am acquainted with. They only want to be known to be brought into general use and the obligation will be fixed to you, and believing that it will be of great benefit to the public, I send you these few lines. I am very much pleased, after having made use of them in my family, and can truly say that I believe them to be a very valuable medicine; I consider them to be very safe, mild and active cathartic, and properly adapted to almost all diseases, and if exercised in season, they might prevent much sickness. We have experienced much benefit for many complaints as recommended especially for scarlet fever when one of my family had been seriously afflicted with for several years, and after taking your pills for about a month, is now entirely well and enjoys good health. Your pills, no doubt, will soon get into general use, as no one cannot but like them after observing their use of them; they do not cause any pain or sickness at the stomach, but always has in every case prevented vomiting, and for the nervous sick head-ache or dispepsia, they are a sure and effectual cure.

New Volume.

The First Number of the Sixteenth Volume OF THE

New York Mirror,

Will be issued on the 3rd day of June.

It will contain a Portrait of Charles Sprague, the American poet, engraved by Parker, from a painting by Harding. A superb 1200 page Work. These will be succeeded by three costly and magnificent Engravings on Steel, by the best artists, designed and engraved from original paintings expressly for the work. Numerous cuts on wood, by Adams, Johnson, and others, will also embellish the forthcoming volume; besides fifty pieces of rare, beautiful and popular music, arranged for the piano-forte, harp, guitar, &c.

The New volume will contain articles from the pens of well-known and distinguished writers, upon every subject that can possibly interest or please the general reader, including Original Poetry—Tales and Essays, humorous and pathetic—critical notices—early and choice selections from the best new publications, both American and English—Scientific and literary intelligence—copious notices of foreign countries, by correspondents engaged expressly and exclusively for this journal—reviews and essays upon the various productions in the fine arts that are presented for the notice and approbation of the public—elaborate and beautiful specimens of art, engraving, music, &c.—notices of the acted drama and other amusements—extracts from the best new works in other languages, French, German, Italian, Spanish, &c.—and an infinite variety of miscellaneous reading relating to passing events, remarkable individuals, discoveries and improvements in science, art, mechanicks, and a series of original papers from American writers of distinction.

As only a limited number of copies will be issued, those persons who are desirous of commencing with the commencement of the sixteenth volume, can be supplied, by directing their communications, post paid to the editors, enclosing the subscription price, five dollars, payable in all cases, in advance.

The editorial conduct of the new volume will be under the charge of Epes Sargent, and will contain, as heretofore, contributions from the pens of Fitz Green Cox, Captain Marryatt, Sheridan Knowles, Inman, Willis, and a list of two hundred others, well known to the reading community. In the variety, interest, amusement and instruction of its literary department, and the splendour of its embellishments, the beauty of its mechanick, and elegance of its typography, it is intended to render the New Mirror, in every respect, equal, if not superior, to its predecessors; and it is universally admitted that no work, extant furnishes such valuable equivalents for the trifling amount at which it is afforded per annum as the Mirror.

In an advertisement like the present, it is not possible to state all our plans for the new volume; and if it were it would not be necessary for a journal so extensively known, not only throughout the United States and Great Britain, but wherever the English language is spoken. Suffice it to say, that neither pains, labour, talent, industry, or expense, shall be spared to render it a light, graceful, and agreeable mirror of elegant literature, as well as an ornament to the periodicals of the country, —intended alike for the perusal of our fair and gentle countrywomen—the unrivalled student, the man of business, and all of both sexes possessing a particle of taste or refinement—and while its pages never will contain a single word or sentence that would vibrate unpleasantly upon the ear of the most sensitive daughter of Eve, they will be rendered not the less acceptable to the opposite sex.

CONDITIONS.

The Mirror is published every Saturday, at No. 1, Barclay-street, next door to Broadway. It is elegantly printed in the extra super-royal quarto form, with brevier, minion, and nonpariel type. It is embellished occasionally three months, with a splendid super royal quarto engraving, and every week with a popular piece of music arranged for the Pianoforte, Harp, Guitar, etc. For each volume an extensive and correct Vignette Titlepage, and a copious Index are furnished. The terms are five dollars per annum, in all cases, in advance. It is forwarded by the earliest mails to subscribers residing out of the City of New York. Communications post paid must be addressed to the editor. No subscription received for a less period than one year. New subscribers may be supplied from the beginning of the present volume.

Plainfield Classical Institution.

THE above Institution is situated in the village of Plainfield, N. J. The building is one of the best in the country. It is pleasantly located and, in every respect, well adapted to the purpose for which it is designed.

On the 2d of May next, this school will be opened, under a new arrangement, for the reception of Gentlemen and Ladies.

The Gentlemen's department is designed to fit young men for the Freshman and Sophomore Classes in Colleges,—also to give a thorough course of instruction in the Sciences and Higher Mathematics, together with all the solid branches of an English Education.

The Ladies' department will be, in most respects, distinct from the other, it being under the direction of a competent and experienced Lady, as Principal. Instruction will be given in all the branches usually taught in the most popular Female Seminaries. It is desirable that all young ladies, who have not friends in the village, should board with the Principal of that department, as they will, thereby, secure all the advantages of a Family Boarding School.

The year is divided into two sessions, of twenty-three weeks each.

Terms.

English Studies, Common branches, per qr.	$2 to $4.00
Higher branches,	6.00
Studies preparatory to a Collegiate Course,	7.00

Tuition bills of all pupils from abroad to be paid in advance.

No deduction for absence, except at the option of the Principal.

Scholars can board with the teachers for $2.25 per week, including washing, ordinary fuel and lights.—Boarders must furnish their own beds and bedding.

N. M. DEXTER,
HORATIO BRYANT, } Associate Principals.

N. B. Reference and further information given on application.

The Trustees having engaged the services of Nathaniel M. Dexter, Horatio Bryant, and his Lady, Mrs. L. C. Bryant, give notice that the first Session of the year will commence, as usual, in May next, under their superintendence.

Mr. Dexter is a graduate of Amherst College, Mass. Mr. Bryant, of Union College, N. Y. and Mrs. Bryant is from Miss Grant's school, Ipswich, Mass.

They are all experienced and successful teachers; and the trustees feel well assured of their ability and intention to maintain a school of high character, with respect, both, to discipline and scholarship.

The well known healthy and beautiful location of Plainfield points it out as a very eligible place for an Institution of the above kind. It is within 22 miles of New York by the rail road, as well as to Newark, Elizabethtown, New Brunswick and other adjacent towns, access is at all times convenient by railroad and stage.

GREEN BROOK

Family School.

THE design of this School is the instruction of Boys in the Latin, Greek and Modern Languages, and in all the solid branches of a thorough English Education. In the accomplishment of this design, great care is taken to procure teachers that are both competent and faithful, and equal care to induce mutual effort and the love of good order on the part of the pupils themselves. The government is administered with firmness and impartiality, but without harshness. Its chief aim is the prevention rather than the punishment of offences. Much solicitude is felt, and ample provisions are made, to secure, as far as possible the health, comfort and safety as well as the intellectual and moral culture of every pupil, during the hours of school, recreation and rest. The sacred Scriptures are received as the only standard of morals; and religious instruction is given without inculcating the peculiar doctrines of any one class of men.

Two sessions of twenty-three weeks each compose a year. One commences regularly on the first Monday in May,—the other on the first Monday in November.

The expense of board, including tuition, washing fuel and lights, is $200 a year, to be paid quarterly in advance. Each boarder must furnish his own bed, bed-clothes and towels, or pay $20 a year for the use of them. Bedsteads are furnished without charge. An extra charge is made for instruction in the modern languages.

Every article of dress and of bedding should be plainly marked with the name of the owner entire.

This school, though intended chiefly for the instruction of such as shall board in the family of the principal, is nevertheless open for the reception of a few day scholars. They are expected however at all times, and on all occasions, to yield a prompt and cheerful obedience to every rule of the institution; and the public may rest assured that no idle, indocile, or incorrigible boy shall be permitted to remain many days in either department.

The tuition bills of all day scholars, whose parents or guardians do not reside in the town must be paid in advance.

The building occupied by this School stands on the south-east bank of Green Brook, in a retired part of Plainfield, one of the most quiet and healthy villages in the State of New Jersey. Both the site and plan of the building are admirably adapted to secure the objects of its erection. Its study rooms and dormitories are susceptible of free ventilation without exposure to the street. It is easy of access at all seasons of the year, either by public or private conveyance. The citizens of New-York, Newark, Paterson and New-Brunswick can visit the School in the morning and return to their homes in the evening of the same day with very little inconvenience.

The Emancipator,

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT THE
AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY
At 143 Nassau street, New York

THE Emancipator is designed to communicate the proceedings, exhibit the views, and extend the principles of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its auxiliaries. At the present time, there is probably no institution whose operations are more important to be known by every American citizen. Combining the influence of probably 200,000 citizens, generously banded together for moral worth and determined purpose, the Anti-Slavery Society will doubtless have a mighty influence for weal or woe. We believe its principles, intelligently embraced and faithfully carried out, are the only true conservatism of our free institutions. Patriotism, as well as religion, therefore forbids that we should draw back, or omit any lawful endeavor to carry forward our enterprise to a speedy and successful triumph.

With these views we are led to urge a large increase of our subscription list. No pains will be spared to make it the vehicle of the most interesting and the most interesting information connected with the cause.

TERMS.—$2 per annum, always in advance.

Those who will forward the money for five copies in advance, shall be entitled to one copy gratis.

No paper will be sent after the subscription is expired

All authorized agents of the Anti-Slavery Society are requested to act as agents for this paper.

Address 143 Nassau street,

Tyrolese War Song.

There's a cloud in the sky,
There's a cloud in the glen,
But the one is of vapor,
The other of man!

We have sworn by the blood
Which Napoleon hath spilt,
With the arm on the altar,
The hand on the hilt—

We have sworn by that God,
Who can keep us, and save us,
To fight for the land
Which our forefathers gave us.

We have sworn by our love,
By that spell which hath bound us,
To fight for the maids
And the mountains around us.

We have taken our last look—
We have taken our last kiss—
But let that hour of anguish
Be paid for in this.

Down, down with the rocks
On the hell-hounds below,
And clear let the horn
Of the Tyrolese blow.

Cut away—cut away,
With the stones and the trees,
And let France long remember
The brave Tyrolese!

And we be to him,
'Mid the thousands beneath,
Whom the Tyrolese mark
From his mountainous heath.

There's a spell in his eye,
There's a spell in his breath,
And the sound of his gun,
Is the watchword of death.

Now, now is the time,
While our standard still waves,
To show there are some yet,
Who will not be slaves.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A Gentle Reproof.—Zachariah Hodgdon was naturally an ill-natured man. It was want of reflection, more than a corrupt and ungenerous heart, that led him to consider wife in the light of an inferior being, and to treat her more like a servant than an equal. If he met any thing abroad to ruffle his temper, his wife was sure to suffer when he came home. His meals were always ill-cooked, and whatever the poor woman did to please him was sure to have a contrary effect. She bore his ill-humor in silence for a long time but finding it to increase, she adopted a method of reproving him for his unreasonable conduct which had the happiest effects.

One day as Zachariah was going to his daily avocation after breakfast, he purchased a fine large codfish, and sent it home with directions to his wife to have it cooked for dinner. As no particular mode of cooking it was prescribed, the good woman well knew that whether she boiled it or made it into a chowder, her husband would scold her when he came home. But she resolved to please him once, if possible, and therefore cooked portions of it in several different ways. She also with some little trouble procured an amphibious animal from a brook back of the house, and plumped it into the pot. In due time her husband came home; some covered dishes were placed on the table, and with a frowning, faultfinding look, the moody man commenced the conversation.

'Well, wife, did you get the fish I bought?'

'Yes, my dear.'

'I should like to know how you have cooked it—I will bet any thing you have spoiled it for my eating. (Taking off the cover.) I thought so. What in creation possessed you to fry it? I would as leaf eat a boiled frog.'

'Why, my dear, I thought you liked it best fried.'

'You didn't think any such thing. You knew better—I never loved fried fish—why didn't you boil it?'

'My dear, the last time we had fresh fish, you know I boiled it, and you said you liked it best fried. But I have boiled some also.'

So saying, she lifted a cover and lo! the shoulders of the cod nicely boiled, were neatly deposited in a dish: a sight which would have made an epicure rejoice, but which only added to the ill-nature of her husband.

'A pretty dish, this!' exclaimed he. 'Boiled fish! chips and porridge! If you had not been odd as the stupidest of womankind you would have made it into a chowder.

His patient wife, with a smile immediately placed a tureen before him containing an excellent chowder.

'My dear,' said she, 'I was resolved to please you. There is your favorite dish.'

'Favorite dish, indeed,' grumbled the discontented husband. 'I dare say it is an unpalateable wishy-washy mess. I would rather have a boiled frog than the whole of it.'

This was a common expression of his, and had been anticipated by the wife, who as soon as the preference was expressed, uncovered a large dish near her husband, and there was a large bullfrog, of portentous dimensions and pugnacious aspect, stretched out at full length! Zachariah sprang from his chair, not a little frightened at the unexpected apparition.

'My dear,' said his wife, in a kind, entreating tone, 'I hope you will at length be able to make a dinner.'

Zachariah could not stand this. His surly mood was finally overcome, and he burst into a hearty laugh. He acknowledged that his wife was right and that he was wrong—and declared that she should never have occasion to read him such another lesson,—and he was as good as his word.

Battles in the last War.—The Richmond Compiler of the 10th inst. very appropriately remarks How few remember that to-day to-morrow, and the next day, are the anniversaries of the battles of Lake Erie, Lake Chaplain and Plattsburg, and Baltimore; the first fought in 1813, the others in '14. A quarter of a century obliterates much from the minds of the survivors of the generation that the scythe of time has mostly mowed down in 25 harvests. Yet the illuminations and other rejoicings exhibited when the accounts of these victories were received, seemed to indicate that they would be held in general remembrance a much longer time.

The following synopsis of these battles will probably be interesting to our readers;

1813, Sept 10.—Battle of Lake Erie, between the British Squadron commanded by Capt. Barclay, and the U. S. by Capt. Perry, which after an action of 3 hours and a half, terminated in the capture of the whole of the British force; the British had 41 killed and 94 wounded, the Americans 27 killed and 96 wounded—British force 63 guns—Americans 54 guns

1814, Sept. 11—The Champlain Britishsquadron, under Comodore Downie, attacked the Americans under Commodore M'Donough, in the harbor of Plattsburg, and after a sanguinary conflict of 2 hours, were (except the galleys) all captured: the Americans had 52 killed and 58 wounded; the British 84 killed and 110 wounded; among the former Capt. Downie; American force 86 gun.—British force 93 guns.

1814, Sept. 12—Battle of Baltimore, in which 5000 British, led by Gen Ross, are repulsed by the Americans, chiefly militia, with a loss of 46 killed (including Gen. Ross) and 295 wounded; the Americans had 40 killed, 300 wounded, and 49 prisoners.

The British fleet was also repulsed in its attack on Fort M'Henry. During the Bombardment the starspangled song of the "Star Spangled Banner" was written.

1814, Sept 21.—Sir George Provost, with 14,000 men, repulsed in an assault upon the Forts at Plattsburg, by Gen Macomb, with 1500 regulars, and about 3000 militia retreats under cover of the night, leaving his sick and wounded to the mercy of his opponents, and destroying stores and provisions to a large amount.

THOMAS PAINE.—AN EXTRACT.

His first wife is said to have died of ill usage. His second was rendered so miserable by neglect and unkindness, that they separated by mutual agreement. His third companion, the wife, was the victim of seduction, while she lived upon the hospitality of her husband. Holding opinions in the excess of England, he was dismissed for irregularity; restored and dismissed again for fraud, without recovery. Unable to get employment where he was known, he came to this country, commenced politician and pretended some knowledge of astronomy. Congress gave him an office, from which, being soon found guilty of a breach of trust, he was expelled with disgrace. The French revolution attured him to France. Habits of intoxication made him a disagreeable inmate in the house of the American minister, where out of compassion he had been received as a guest. During all this time, his life was a compound of ingratitude and perfidity, of hypocrisy and avarice, of lewdness and adultery. In June 1802, he was drunk, and in his low moments of sobriety, was quarrelling with her, and disturbing the peace of her family." At that time "she was deliberately and disgustingly filthy. He had an old black woman for his servant, as drunken as her master. He accused her of stealing his rum; she retaliated, accusing him of being an old drunkard. They would lie on the same floor upon the ground and swearing and threatening to fight, but they were too much intoxicated to engage in battle." The ruin moved afterwards to various families, continuing his habits, and paying for his board only when compelled. In his drunken fits he was accustomed to talk about the immortality of the soul. Such was the author of the Age of Reason;' such the apostle of infidelity! Unhappy man! Neither he nor Rousseau, nor Voltaire, is dead, except in the flesh. Their immortal souls are undying as actively, at least as ever. We need say, we stand on the same ground, they, beside me bar of God. How awful is reference to such despisers and scoffers is that description—"behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him."—Bishop M'Ilvaine's Evidences of Christianity.

The Patient Little Girl.—The following interesting account of a sick and lame child, is taken from the report of a visitor of the N. Y. Female Moral Reform Society. Her mother was a poor woman, and often called away from home for hours together.

At such times little J. was left alone to employ and amuse herself as she best could. There in that solitary basement, she sat day after day, unable to walk, and with no companion but her Bible and a few little tracts. She was able to read but indifferently, having never had regular instruction. The contrast between the mother and daughter was striking. She former so coarse and ill bred; the latter so amiable and docile, that she reminded us strongly of Leigh Richmond's Young Cottager, whose affecting narrative we found her trying to spell out when we went in. On being asked if she wished to be like Jane, "O yes, ma'am," she replied, and the tears stood in her eyes—"She was so mild, so patient, she was such a good girl." On being told that if she would be like Jane, she must make Christ her pattern like Jane did, "O yes, ma'am, that is what I try to do, I think of him more than any one else; but I read so bad that I don't always understand what the good book says about him." I repeated to her some of Christ's words of encouragement to children and youth. "I said she, "I know that's what I learned in the Sabbath school Won't you find it for me in that Bible?" When found, she turned down the leaf, saying "that she knew it so well she could spell it out after we were gone." Her company was a loral affection arising from sympathy. It was thought necessary by some physicians to amputate the limb; by others, that an operation would be sufficient. She seemed greatly troubled in view of the suffering, but said she hoped she would be able to submit patiently. The tears streamed down her cheeks as she looked up many times and said, "I wish it was over." We directed her to many precious promises to the poor and needy, which seemed to strengthen her. From the 23d Psalm she derived much consolation. We read and commented upon it, when she smiled took the book quietly and turned down the leaf. She thanked us on leaving her, and earnestly entreated us to call again. This was our first visit. At the next, we found she had been removed to the hospital, where we visited her to day in a room with about a dozen other patients. The internal and external arrangements of this institution are highly creditable to the city: none are admitted but such as are truly deserving, and for these it is a comfortable and safe retreat The general neatness of the grounds as we approached, bespoke the good taste of the directors; and the cleanliness and comfort of the apartments within, bespoke the benevolence and kindness of its conductors. We handed little J. some refreshments which we had brought, which she seemed very grateful, but presently laid them away and took up the tract, which lay by her side, and said she wished to show how well she could read one or two paragraphs. She read with much sweetness, receiving no correction. We told her to look constantly to the Saviour for instruction and guidance. "Yes," she replied, "I endeavored to do so; I gave my heart to him every night." We dreaded to apply the painful subject, fearing her firmness would fail, but finally inquired of the physician and concluded to operate upon her limb? She answered cheerfully "Yes, ma'am, on the third day from this." "Well, my child how do you feel in prospect of it?" "O I don't dread it at all now, ma'am: I think I shall be carried through." "You must look to the dear Saviour, dear; you will find in him a friend that will never leave you." "Yes," was her answer, "I should try," and she went on describing with tearfulness the expected operation, and apparently without the slightest dread. We left, with a wish one of the lambs that Christ was carrying in his bosom.

The Mormons it is said can muster 1000 armed men in Missouri. At the last dates the house of a Mr. Black was surrounded by a party consisting of about 120 ruffians, who required of him to sign an instrument not writing, of the contents of which he was not aware, under pain of death in case of refusal. So confident are these outlaws of their strength, that they openly declare that they owe no allegiance to the laws, which, as they assert, have failed to protect them, and that it will require, in the words of Wright, "a new set number, "the whole State of Missouri to take him."

A member of the society of Friends now deceased, wishing to procure a frank from the late Bishop Pelham, wrote to his bookseller thus;—Joseph S——— will thank George Pelham to do the needful."

Adventure of a diamond.—A week or two since a Jew dealer living in Longlane, Smithfield purchased a diamond of great beauty, which, after keeping by him a few days, he sold to another dealer, also an Israelite, for 8 sovereigns. This man, who possessed considerable sagacity in matters of the kind, soon after disposed of it for 50 pounds. It then obtained notice in a higher and more respectable market, and a jeweller living near Aldgate Pump, becoming its owner, sold it to a celebrated and extensive firm on Ludgate hill for 260 pounds, and it has since realized a sum exceeding 400 guineas.

The Stolen Sermon.—Two gentlemen, who had attended a charity sermon, were talking of it afterwards in company. "Didn't you like our parson's sermon very much?" said one. "No," replied the other, "it was a good sermon; but he stole it." This was told the preacher, who resented it, and called on the gentleman to retract what he had said. "I am not," replied the aggressor, "very apt to retract my words; but in this instance I will. I said you had stolen the sermon; I perceive I was wrong; for on returning home and referring to the book that I thought it was taken from, I found it there."

A New Method of Teaching Music.—A Highland piper having a school to teach, disdained to crack his brain with the names of semibreves, minims, crotchets and quavers. 'Here Donald,' said he, 'take your pipes lad, and gin'e a blast. So verra weel blawn indeed; but what's a sound Donald without sense? Ye may blaw for ever, without making a tune o't, if I dinna tell ye how the queer things on the paper mean baith. Ye see that big fellow with a round open face, (pointing to a semibreve between the two lines of the bar) he moves slowly from that line to this, while ye beat ane wi' your fist, and gie a long blast; if ye now put a leg to him, ye mak' two o' him, and he'll run four times faster than than the fellow wi' the white face; ye'll bend his knee or tie his legs, he'll hop eight times faster than that white faced shap that I showed you first. Now when'er you blaw your pipes, Donald remember this, that the tighter those fellows' legs are tied, the faster they'll run, and the quicker they're sure to dance."
